WHAT IS

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

Timothy Dame, Esq., of Eliot, unfurled a beautiful banner on the 23d, bearing the names of the republican candidates for president and vice president of the United States. The flag is fifteen feet wide and twenty-two feet long, and is suspended across the street fifty-five feet above its bed, which enables it to be seen from all parts of the southerly section of the town.

Mr. Charles Bragdon and Mrs. Helen E. Bragdon of York village, were united in marriage on Saturday evening, July 21st. The quiet wedding took place at he residence of the bride, Rev. D. B. Sewall officiating. The bridal pair started on Monday, the 23d, on a short wedding trip.

Mr. Card, who lives near Chase's pond, York, brought into this city on Saturday last a very fine Jersey bull, two years old, which attracted much attention from farmers while on the Parade. The animal was sold at a good price.

A despatch from Sanford, Me., says: "A Washington despatch on Wednesday, in speaking of the effect of the Mills bill on the plush industry, refers to the Hopewell plush mills of Sanford, York county, Maine. This is a correspondent's mistake. The mills located here are not named the Hopewell plush mills, but are called the Sanford plush mills. They were established in 1867 by the Messrs. Goodall, of Sanford, who are the principal owners and managers. Sanford is one of the most enterprising of Maine towns, and its prosperity is due to the carriage-robe and car-plush industry conducted by the Messrs. Goodall. The progress of the Mills bill is anxiously watched here, for should it pass in its present form, the Sanford mills will shut down indefinitely and from 700 to 800 people will be thrown out of employment."

Every manufacturer encouraged in our country makes part of a market for provisions within ourselves, and saves so much money to the country as must otherwise be exported to pay for the manufactures he supplies.—Benj. Franklin.

A True Story of the Calumet and Hecla.

John Harrington was so lucky in the May drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery. Like the substantial, matter-of-fact man that he is, he continues as engineer at the Atlantic Mining Co.'s stamp mill. His ticket, which was one-tenth of No. 21,492, the one that drew the second capital prize of $50,000, was the second that he had bought in The Louisiana State Lottery. His prize was collected for him by the National Bank of Houghton. It was promptly invested by him in stock of the Calumet & Hecla Mining company. —Houghton (Mich.) Gazette, June 14th.

THE HORSE RAILROAD.

An enterprising evening cotemporary recently stated, with apparent authority, that work was to be begun on the Portsmouth horse railroad on the first day of August. We have expected to behold on that day the noble son of Italy picking the way of the bobtail car to roll through our streets, and anon to have heard the tinkle of the bell which would denote the approach of this means of effeminate transportation to succeed the exercise of walking to and from our office. But there appears to be a hitch somewhere. It is not, we are led to believe, a hitch of the restive steed to the richly companioned car which was to convey all who desired to ride out to the Plains by one road and return by the other, and which was to bring the very gates of Newcastle bridge in close proximity to the railroad station. The delay, as we understand it, is caused by some financial vacuum, some lack of sinews or substantial aid. True, the stock may be all taken. People are apt to take stock now-a-days in concerns concerning which they have but little knowledge; but in this case there seems to be that lack of very hard cash which it is desirable to behold snugly laid away in the treasury before an enterprise starts. The local capitalists who figure upon the board of direction have perhaps been coy in figuring upon the subscription list. "After you, sir," was doubtless the Chesterfieldian reply when invited to subscribe. At all events, the start will not in all probability be made on the first of August. It may be considerably later. It is safe to assert that it will be sometime after. In the meantime, the corporation has its charter, its valuable franchise, its aldermanic permission, and its rose-colored prospects. How valuable these assets may be is of course no concern of ours. As at present advised, we shall still be compelled to walk. Our constitutional promenade around the Plains will still be taken on foot. We shall not ride in the middle of the streets, because we shall perambulate on the sidewalks. The sound of the bell punch will still remain hushed, unless some of the resident shareholders double up their subscriptions, and complete the road which thus far exists only in the minds of its projectors and opposers.

"YORK BEACH" DEMURS.

YORK BEACH, ME., July 23d.

Editor of Gazette: The article in last week's paper under the heading of "Matters in York," is not correct in one particular concerning York Beach, and we think if you had been rightly informed on the subject you would not have permitted it to appear in your paper, as it is largely patronized here, and considered to be one of the best county papers, and you would not knowingly do us an injustice. You speak of the "Soulless Corporation," the Y. H. & B. R. R.; they can take care of themselves; but when *you speak of York Beach in a way to injure it, we wish to say a word.

In the first place the Long beach people and the hotels you speak of as being so badly wronged, named their beach years ago; and if you will take the trouble to look the field over you will see finger-boards now up in several places, put up by the same wronged hotels, stating so many miles to their hotels on Long Beach. Then you state York Beach is located at Union Bluff, which is not the case. The depot at York Beach is located between Long beach and the Bluff, and about as near to Concordville, Dover Bluff, and Evanston, all flourishing villages, and all of these places constitute York Beach. Then there is the Bald Head Cliff house, and the pretty little village of Cape Neddick, with its four stores, churches, etc., which patronize York Beach station, and help to make it up. Then we have three to four hundred cottages, nine hotels, ten stores and bake shops, meat market, etc., all within three to ten minutes walk of the station. Then we have a post-office called York Beach, which was named years ago, and known as York Beach post-office all over the country.

"Long Beach" is a fine beach, and the people have always been proud to call it by that name until the "Soulless Corporation," as you see fit to call it, saw fit to build a railroad to York Beach. Now if they are ashamed to still retain the name they gave it, who don't they take down their signs that they looked so proud upon in years gone by, when the stages used to pass loaded with passengers which they used to try to head off from going to York Beach? Of course by their tempting signs "Long Beach," in bold letters.

We wish to say nothing disparaging of Long Beach, but will say that in the immediate vicinity of Long Beach station you will find two hotels and perhaps one or two cottages; no stores; or nothing of the kind. Further along the beach, nearing York Beach station, will be found Sea Cottage, the Donnell house, two or three smaller houses, and several cottages. Now I wish to call your attention to the amount of business done at these stations, which you will readily see, judging from the large number of hotels, stores, the number of cottages crowded with people, the large number of buildings going up, one fine artesian well, now in operation, and a company will soon be formed to put in electric lights, gas, etc.,—you will see that Long Beach is nothing but a drop in the bucket compared with York Beach as to business.

Yours truly, YORK BEACH.

* Note. Our friend "York Beach" apparently thinks that we—the editorial "we"—penned the brief item in last week's Gazette regarding the railroad's change of name of what was at first the "Union Bluff station," to be "York Beach station," which item seems so distasteful to him. He is in error. If he will glance at the item he so condemns—and which we fail to see says a word in derogation or in favor of one portion of York's sea front as against any other portion—he will see that we were no more responsible for "P's" article than we are for his own, both being communications, and inserted as such.

The fact is, that while we have only the best wishes for the welfare of York, from end to end and from low-water mark to its farthest-inland boundary, we are hardly qualified to personally say much about its bluffs or beaches. The last time we visited York beach was before the railroad was built; some time before; in fact, so far as we ever discovered, about the only way the beach could then be reached was by crossing a pasture with the likelihood of being treed by some terrible bull, or through a field with a probability of being raced over a stone wall by a still more terrible farmer with a pitchfork. There was not then a hotel, boarding house or summer cottage from York harbor to Talpey's neck. Hence our mentor, "York Beach," may readily infer that we are not likely to assume any great authority as to York beach affairs—and we positively decline to accept his imputation that we have ever spoken of any section of the beach or the town with intent to injure the same.—Ed.

A long and heavy farm wagon, drawn by three horses and with no driver, went down State street as fast as the runaway horses could haul it on Tuesday forenoon, and everybody discreetly got out of its way. At the foot of State street the runaway team was stopped by Mr. Peter O'Donnell, at much risk to himself; otherwise the whole establishment would probably have gone overboard.

The Webster house is being enlarged by the addition of another story. Workmen commenced Tuesday to raise the roof to the required height for that purpose.

If all the women and children who went down Sagamore road with baskets and tin kettles on Tuesday got a quart of huckleberries apiece, the total must have been about ten bushels.

A new cross-walk has been laid on Deer street at the western entrance of the Boston & Maine station—a convenience which will be appreciated when the season of mud returns.

Runaway teams have been so numerous of late in our streets that a city official on Tuesday remarked: "I should advice all pedestrians to keep out of the middle of the street, and even on the sidewalks to keep close under the eaves of the houses, with an eye out for a friendly doorway to dodge into in case a runaway takes to the sidewalk!" Another danger altogether too common in our streets, in the vicinity of Market square, is the presence of loose horses, evidently allowed out by the carelessness of stable men; we have heard of four or five running about within a week or so, and it should be promptly stopped by the authorities.

Peter Page of Amesbury, Mass., has sold his house on Hill street to Mrs. Johanna Reagan.

Mr. M J. Ryan's Cleveland and Thurman flag has not ornamented Water street for some days past.

The coal business is booming, and another rise in price is prognosticated in the near future.

Daniel Mason has just put into his mill a new wood-sawing machine, of a peculiar model of his own construction and design, with which he will soon commence operations. Mr. Mason has always been a strong democratic voter at the polls, but he now says: "I think it is best not to go about them at all."

The remains of Charles E. Foss, who died recently in Little Rock, Ark., arrived in this city on Saturday, and were interred at Rye on Sunday.

Mr. George W. Southworth of Lynn, Mass., who lost his life by a runaway accident in this city on the evening of the 23d inst., was well known in the neighboring towns as manager of the Lynn Milk Co.'s business in this section. He was a veteran of the 8th Massachusetts Volunteers, a member of Post 5, G. A. R., of Lynn, and a Mason of high rank. He leaves a wife.

Mrs. Charles H. Joy, who was quite badly hurt on Monday evening, July 23d, by a carriage accident on Sagamore road, was on Tuesday reported to be more comfortable, though still threatened with inflammation of the brain. Mrs. James R. Morrison, who was in the same accident, had her face considerably scarred, but was not seriously hurt. The children in the team at the time escaped with a few bruises. None of the parties, (excepting Mr. Morrison, who was thrown from the team by a stumble of the horse) would have been hurt had they not jumped from the team.

MARITIME NOTES.

The U. S. S. Ossipee, Comdr. Wm. B. Hoff commanding, arrived in the lower harbor on Monday, the 23d inst., from Newport via Boston, and came to the navy yard Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Charles White took fifty pounds of eels and twenty-five pounds of cunners on Monday night, and sent them inland over the Concord & Portsmouth railroad on Tuesday.

The steamer Undine, Capt. Duncan, took about seventy-five persons down river and outside the harbor on a moonlight excursion, Tuesday evening.

Dog fish are reported by the fishermen to be much more plentiful than welcome on the shore fishing grounds off this harbor now.

A letter received in this city on the 23d inst. from Mr. Richard I. Walden, dated at Newport, R. I., reported the schooner Agnes E. Downs at that port with no mackerel since leaving this harbor.

A visit to an old boat-building shop of the ship building time of Portsmouth discloses the same old well-worn floors and benches of thirty years ago. Samuel S. Green still continues the business there, on what used to be Short street, but is now Vaughan. There are three fine specimens of well built and stout boats of recent construction on exhibition there; one of them is a lap-strake boat 17 feet in length and 5 1-2 in breadth, designed either for oars or sails.

The steam yacht Emma S., a very handsome boat, last from Marblehead, Mass., was at Commercial wharf on Tuesday afternoon for coal and supplies.

The great interests of an agricultural, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

Want of Sleep

Is sending thousands annually to the insane asylum; and the doctors say this trouble is alarmingly on the increase. The usual remedies, while they may give temporary relief, are likely to do more harm than good. What is needed is an Alterative and Blood-purifier. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is incomparably the best. It corrects those disturbances in the circulation which cause sleeplessness, gives increased vitality, and restores the nervous system to a healthful condition.

Rev. T. G. A. Coté, agent of the Mass. Home Missionary Society, writes that his stomach was out of order, his sleep very often disturbed, and some impurity of the blood manifest; but that a perfect cure was obtained by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frederick W. Pratt, 424 Washington Street, Boston, writes: "My daughter was prostrated with nervous debility. Ayer's Sarsaparilla restored her to health."

William F. Bowker, Erie, Pa., was cured of nervousness and sleeplessness by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for about two months, during which time his weight increased over twenty pounds.

Secure from Harm

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chillblas ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieve cramps and pains, prevent indigestion, destroy disease germs in water drunk, restore the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, break up colds and fevers, and ward off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

Neveral travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

CITY OF PORTSMOUTH.

CITY MARSHAL'S OFFICE, July 14, 1888.

FREQUENT complaints having been brought to my notice that men and boys are in the habit of bathing in the waters exposed to the streets, highways and other public places, especially in Sagamore Creek near Lafayette road and Sagamore road, in violation of the city ordinance; notice is hereby given that all persons found offending in this particular will be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

JEFF. C. ROWE, City Marshal.

LICENSE YOUR DOGS.

SECTION 1. No dog shall be permitted to go at large or loose in this city until the owner or keeper of such dog, or the keeper of the house or place where such dog is kept or harbored, shall have procured from the city marshal a license for such dog.

SECTION 5. It shall be the duty of the city marshal to cause all dogs found killed which shall be found at large or loose within the city without a collar marked as required by law; and to cause all dogs so killed to be buried; and any person may lawfully kill any dog found within the limits of this city going at large contrary to the provisions of this chapter.

Increment on the case any dog shall be found loose or going at large contrary to any of the foregoing provisions, or in case any dog not licensed shall be provided with a collar marked as required in this ordinance, the owner or keeper thereof or the head of the family or keeper of the house or place where such dog is kept or harbored, shall upon conviction thereof be fined five dollars.

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes. Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often discussed their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

IN MOONLIGHT.

The white moon fills the silent sky,
And stirring at her feet
The white floods rise and leap the shore—
Bold lovers, rash and fleet.

But a swifter flood to feel her sway,
And rush in a restless tide,
Is the love that leaps from my heart in words
For her whom I walk beside.

The white moon slips from the silent sky,
The sea slips from the shore,
And back to my happy, silent heart
Sweeps the flood of words once more.

But not till the waves have kissed the beach,
And the moon has kissed the sea,
And not until, sweetheart, I too
Have kissed—been kissed by thee.

Art of Polishing Diamonds.

The art of cutting and polishing diamonds with their own powder was introduced in Europe according to the generally received account, by Louis van Bergen, or Berguem, who, in Paris, studied the handicraft, then imperfectly practiced. He revolutionized the trade and established a guild of diamond cutters in Bruges. In 1475, nearly twenty years after he had made the discovery, if it was a discovery, he was entrusted with the task of cutting three large rough diamonds for Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy. For his work he received 9,000 ducats. The largest was the famous Sancy diamond, which was lost in the battle of Granson. The second afterwards belonged to Pope Sixtus IV. The third, a triangular shaped stone, was set in a ring and given to Louis XI.—New York Mail and Express.

The Great Climatic Cycle.

According to the calculations of M. Adolphe d'Assier, based on the assumption that the coincidence of the earth's perihelion passage with the summer solstice every 21,000 years marks the regular recurrence of a northern glacial period, the last glacial period, culminated in 9250 B. C., the alternating period of greatest northern warmth occurred A. D. 1250, and the ice period now approaching will reach its greatest height A. D. 11,750. Evidence of the slow cooling during the past 600 years is seen in the changes recorded in the northern limits of the growth and ripening of certain fruits.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Influenced by Environment.

Many a man is saved from the company of the defiled and the defiling by the sweetness and light of a cheery home. Many a woman, in the possession of a house which invites the actualization of her womanly concepts of the amenities of decorative art, finds the cares of the household no drudgery and her work lightened and brightened by the cheerfulness of her environment. Human nature is always more or less influenced by environment, and the house which one builds and lives in has much to do in shaping his character and disposition.—Pioneer Press.

Poison of the Azalia.

In the splendid flowering time of the azalia it is interesting to remember the old story of the Pontic variety. Beneath the fragrance of these flowers lurks a subtle poison, and it was from them that the honey was collected by the bees of Pontus, which, when eaten by the Greek soldiers in the famous retreat of the Ten Thousand, produced extraordinary symptoms of poisoning. Xenophon states that after eating it the men fell stupefied in all directions, so that the camp looked like a battlefield covered with corpses.—Boston Journal.

He Blacked His Nose.

A correspondent relates that, while hunting in Colorado last year, his eyes were painfully affected by a long march on snow, with a bright sun. The guide, also feeling the glare, stopped, and taking some burned wood from a stump, blacked his nose and under the eyes well down on the cheek bone. On being asked the reason he said it stopped snow blindness, and as the glare was very strong the hunter did the same, and found immediate relief. He did this all the time he was out, and never found the snow affect his eyes in any way.—Nature.

Keeping Him in Tow.

"Edward, dear, I hardly know my own heart," said the girl, softly, "and you must give me a little time to think it all over."

"Will you want very much time?" he asked, tenderly and hopefully. "When may I come for an answer?"

In a low, sweet voice, the girl replied: "At the end of the season." And she arose languidly, adjusted her tournure with the gentle tap indicative of noble birth, and moved gracefully away.—Life.

Wanted Somebody to Be Sorry.

Dying Benedict—I bequeath every dollar to my wife. Have you got that down?

Lawyer—Yes.

Dying Benedict—On condition that she marries within a year.

Lawyer—But why insist upon that?

Dying Benedict—Because I want somebody to be sorry that I died.—Harper's Bazar.

An Old Superstition.

Once more, as the presidential campaign opens, we hear the old familiar prophesies from business men of presumed intelligence that there is sure to be a general depression in trade for the next five months in consequence of the impending election. It would be interesting to know how this curious idea got root in the minds of sensible people. It is certainly a pure superstition, and whatever actual depression a presidential election brings to business is only what is caused by acting on that superstition as a truth. If business men persist in deluding themselves into the idea that trade is bound to be dull, it certainly will be. But there is no real reason why it should be so.—Providence Journal.

Better Than They Appear.

All men are better than they appear on the surface. The world has been too much with them. The divine soul finds itself choked and stifled by the accidents of temperament and environment; it is disheartened by the multitudinous contradictions in this paradoxical world; the brain is stupid and muddled and fails to recognize the right; the flesh is weak; nevertheless the divine soul dwells latent below the surface, and may flare out at any moment in some sudden and unlooked for manner.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Dickens' Love of Order.

Dickens' love of order was very marked, and his writing materials were always neatly arranged, and his household was a model of order. The highways and byways of London were familiar to him and many happy hours were spent rambling in them. He had a theory that the number of hours engaged in literary labor should have a corresponding time spent in pedestrian exercise, and he frequently enjoyed a twenty mile walk.—Home Journal.

Cats Versus Rabbits.

Cats are found to be the best exterminators of rabbits in New Zealand. They do great havoc among the young ones, and in some sections scarcely a rabbit was to be seen.

Marshal Lebœuf was a soldier to the end. His last words were: "Let my regiment march past. I want to see my artillerymen, every soldier of them."

Chastity enables the soul to breathe pure air in the foulest places.—Joubert.

I suffered for a long time from a severe, hacking cough, which was pronounced by a skillful physician to be dangerous and liable to terminate in consumption. I was completely cured by using Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.—Henry A. Bean, Lawrence, Mass.

Because King Milan is a king, although an unprincipled rake, and because Queen Natalie is a queen, although a good mother, the young prince must be torn from his good mother and given to his dissolute father. Such is statecraft in Europe, says the Boston Record. And such, unfortunately, is the law in many of the United States.—Woman's Journal.

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called a "cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

The great prison at San Quentin, Cal., has 1,400 inmates, of whom only twenty are women. Yet the California papers continue to talk about the danger there would be from the votes of bad women if women had suffrage, as if the vicious and criminal class were larger among women than among men.

Ladies Who Bloat.

What a great number there are; how uncomfortable it makes them; it is almost impossible for those afflicted to enjoy life. In my private practice I have always found Sulphur Bitters to be the best remedy. All who are thus troubled should use it.—Mrs. Dr. Childs, Boston.

A great fire has occured at Port-au-Prince, set by incendiaries.

Not a particle of calomel, nor any other deleterious substance, enters into the composition of Ayer's Pills. On the contrary, this medicine is carefully compounded from the curative properties of purely vegetable substances. Try it.

Lynn shoe manufactures declare that the trade outlook is good.

The favorite washing compound of the day is James Pyle's Pearline. It cleanses fabrics without injury and without the laborious scrubbing necessary with ordinary soap. For sale by grocers.

Canadian militia are held in readiness for service in the northwestern territory.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous bo your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

The North German Gazette says there will be no change in German policy.

WHY WORK FOR ANOTHER, or on small salary? Why continue working on a worn-out farm? Why try to secure a living from such highly priced or heavily-mortgaged farms? Why work on rented land? Why not start for yourself? Why not secure at cheap rates of the low-priced but very fertile and well located lands adjacent to railroads now to be obtained by those going to Northern Dakota and Minnesota, where you can make a larger net profit per acre than on the high-priced or worn-out land you now occupy? OH! MY HEAD.

The pain from Neuralgia and its companion disease Rheumatism is excruciating. Thousands who could be quickly cured are needlessly suffering. Ath-lo-pho-ros will do for others what it did for the following parties:

Williamsport, Ind., Oct. 3, 1887.

Having been afflicted with neuralgia for the past four years, and trying almost everything, but in vain, I finally heard of Athlophoros. After taking one bottle I found it to be helping me, and after taking four bottles of Athlophoros and one of Pills, I found that I was entirely well. I think the medicine is positively a sure cure.

When They Leave Us,

The exodus of our bodily troubles is doubly welcome if their departure is unaccompanied by pain. It is the fault of the best of commendable cathartics, which act solely upon the bowels, that in operation they gripe and weaken these organs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters produce a laxative effect, but neither causes pain nor weaken the abdominal region or the stomach. This is pre-eminently the alterative which a constipated, billious or dyspeptic person should use, since a resort to it involves no bodily discomfort nor a violent reaction. The liver is aroused, the stomach benefitted, and the habit of body speedily and permanently improved by it. Fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles are among the maladies for which recorded experience has proved it to be efficacious. It is a wholesome appetizer, and a far more reliable tranquillizer of the nerves than stomach-disturbing narcotics and sedatives.

Is essential to good health; but at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, derangement of the digestive organs, and the weakening effect of the changing season. WIND OF THE WEST.

At last the Day is done,
At last the pitiless Sun,
With his eye of red, unsparing light,
Is drowned in a cloud deluge out of sight,
And over the purple cloud billows—white
And calm rides the silver bark
Of the Evening Star—a lonely ark.

Ah! What soft stir,
What wing like whir?
What comes from the west like a dove of peace
From ark and deluge in blest release?
'Tis thou, sweet Wind of the West!
Dove, with soft coolness upon thy breast.

Oh! bring me a spell of rest,
Sweet, sweet Wind of the West!
You bring fresh balm to my window flowers,
They drink your breath as they drink the showers;
Bring me a message of peace
From the land whence you come when the hot hours cease—

The Land of the purple West
Beyond the Sierras' crest,
Where one dwells who is dearer far
To my heart than to Evening her one white star.
Oh! Wind, in your wandering quest,
Have you kissed those lips that I loved the best?
Have you tossed those locks I have oft caressed?

Lost to me now for aye,
Only my Dreams may stray
Light as your wing, oh, Wind of the West,
Wild as your wing in its sad unrest,
To the One I love the best.

Something About Castor Oil.

The average boy has an idea that castor oil was got up for the torture of all kids who have careful mothers to protect them from the fell destroyer. He is mistaken, like a majority of grown people, who only regard castor oil as a medicine. Only a very small proportion of it is consumed in that manner. Castor oil forms one of the best lubricators, and is used for greasing wagons and other purposes where the price does not prohibit it. Then it is burned as an illuminator, not only by the Jews for their Sabbath lamp, but elsewhere. In India, where large quantities of the seed are raised, the oil is added to the native condiments to flavor them. It is also made into an illuminating gas in India. In this country castor oil is used to dress morocco leather. California, Kansas, Iowa and Illinois are the principal sections of this country where the seed is raised, and the castor oil presses at Belville, Ills., are among the most extensive in the world.—New York Graphic.

The Native Army of India.

The imperial service—I use the expression recommended by the civil service commissioners because it covers both the civilians and the administering soldiers—have displayed for a century a rigid respect for promises and perfect pecuniary honor. Consequently, aided by the rooted Indian idea, that, power being of God, any one, however hostile, may honorably serve a de facto ruler, they have always been able to hire Indian agents of all kinds—soldiers, policemen and minor officials—in any number required. That power, however, gives them no foothold. As 1857 showed, they have not secured even the loyalty of the Indian soldiers bound to them by oath, and while actually in the service, and outside the ranks of their paid servants, they have nothing to depend on. There is no nation or tribe or caste in India which is certain in the hour of trial to stand by the white man's side; which has, so to speak, elected him as ruler; which, were the garrison defeated or withdrawn, could be trusted to die rather than the empire should fall. There is no native army that the imperial service—which is, I repeat, the empire—could summon with confidence; no tribe whom they could arm en masse; no native city whose inhabitants would risk a storm to protect them from being slain. — Meredith Townsend in Fortnightly Review.

Naked in 68 Degrees Below Zero.

"The coldest spot is probably around the magnetic pole. I myself found 71 degs. below—and moved camp twelve miles that day. Therefore it is quite possible that at the pole itself there is open water."

"How cold is such a temperature as judged by results?"

"It is pretty cold, but one gets used to it. There is a peculiar misunderstanding about such a low temperature in the scientific world. I remember reading in The Popular Science Monthly, which is supposed to be accurate, a statement to the effect that in such cold meat taken from a boiling pot will freeze solid before it can be put into the mouth. That is nonsense. Why, I have been naked in a temperature of 68 degs. below. It was inside a snow hut as I took off my clothes and got into a sleeping bag. It is the wind that plays the mischief with everybody; but, fortunately, the colder it gets the stiller it gets, and when it gets way down it's pretty quiet, I can tell you. But when you get back to the ordinary temperature, then comes the torture. When I got on the whaler and began to get south I suffered excruciatingly, and thought I should suffocate; a fish out of water was nothing to it."—Interview with Lieut. Schwatka.

A Japanese Comic Artist.

Coming to modern times a brief glance on the wag of the distant land is in pleasant order. About 130 years ago the most famous artist Japan has ever known was born. His name was Hokusai, and of the weird, peculiar work of the artists of that wonderful country his is said by his countrymen to have excelled all others. All other artists confined themselves almost exclusively to lords and ladies of the court, rich dresses and gorgeous silk costumes, with vases and palanquins.

But Hokusai made a new departure. He gave himself up to humor. He opened a studio in Yeddo in 1810, and labored steadily until 1849. He has left many books of sketches, and the results of numerous trips are left in illustrated albums. His favorite study was the horse. One of his drawings represented a horse with his hind legs wildly waving in the air, while a young woman stands on a lariat, which had been trailing behind him as he ran.

The scene is supposed to be laid in Kaipzu, a little village on Lake Biwa. The young woman, named Kaneko, is noted for her strength. In stopping the runaway she simply stepped on the lariat, and the horse's further flight was at once checked. Hokusai is dead, but his pictures are held among his countrymen as examples of perfection in art.—The Journalist.

Typhoid Mortality in Chicago.

M. Chamberland, chief of M. Pasteur's laboratory, has been writing an important report demonstrating the unsatisfactory character of hygiene in France. He finds that the deaths from typhoid fever per 100,000 of population are 63 in Paris, 19 in Brussels, and 17 in Berlin and London. A critique on this report, published in a Lyons medical journal, points out that, in addition to faulty hygiene, antiquated methods of treatment usual in France may have something to answer for. Readers would be interested in an explanation of the cause of the typhoid mortality in Chicago. Even in such a phenomenally healthy year as 1885 there were reported 496 deaths from typhoid fever in this city. On the basis of 630,000 population—assumed by the health department—this gives a mortality of 78.7 per 100,000, or nearly one-fourth greater than the rate in Paris, and more than four times that of Berlin and London. Is this excessive mortality from a typical filth disease, due to the "unsatisfactory character of hygiene" in Chicago, to "antiquated methods of treatment," or to the inexcusable ignorance of physicians who report all their fatal cases of continued fever as "typhoid?"—Chicago News.

Story of "Puss in Boots."

Puss is a moral story in Russia, Sicily, among the Avars and at Zanzibar. In those countries the cat helps the man from a motive of gratitude. In France, Italy, India and elsewhere, "Puss in Boots" is an immortal story; the cat is a swindler, the Marquis de Carabas is his accomplice. Is the moral the primitive part and essence of the story, or is the moral a later idea tagged on? M. Gaston de Paris thinks the Zanzibar version is the original. There the man is ungrateful to the kind beast, and is punished by awaking to find his prosperity a dream. Mr. Traill thinks the story is the original thing and the moral an afterthought. Who is to decide?

It is odd, in any case, that when Cruikshank illustrated and rewrote "Puss in Boots" for a moral purpose he introduced the moral motive of gratitude in the cat. Now he probably invented this, for he was no folklorist, and his invention thus jumped with the tale as told by Avars and Swahilis. Human fancy has these narrow limits, which cause literary coincidences.—Andrew Lang in Longman's Magazine.

The Sultan and His Wives.

Doubtless tears, clamors, poutings work the same results in Constantinople that they do in Washington, and the luxurious harem may have some dull corner where the discarded favorite may weep, neglected, while her victorious rival sweeps by in triumph. The Turks are tender in the extreme to animals and children, and we must believe they are also gentle toward women. Sometimes the caprices of wives have been as costly as the sultan to the empire. Sultan Ibrahim allowed his to take what they pleased from shops and bazaars without payment. One houri complained; she did not like shopping by daylight, and at once the sovereign issued an order requiring merchants to keep their shops open all night and to have enough torches burning to exhibit goods to advantage. Another, whose name means Little Bit of Sugar, whispered to Ibrahim that she wanted to see him with his beard fringed with gems. The lord of lords was adorned accordingly, and made a spectacle of himself, thus tricked out. —Susan E. Wallace in New York Sun.

Story of the Fair Ginevra.

Married to Francesco degli Agolanti, the one of her two lovers who loved her least, Ginevra was buried alive during a trance or collapse which looked like death. Waking up to consciousness in the moonlight, she freed herself from her grave clothes and crawled to the house of her husband for shelter. He, sorrowful for her death as he was, refused to believe that this pale revenante, crying at his door, was his living wife, and superstitiously denied her admittance. So did her mother; so did her uncle. Then, nearly dying in good earnest, she betook her to the house of her other and truer lover, Antonio di Rondinelli, and sank fainting on the threshold, after she had cried for help. And Rondinelli, enlightened by love, recognized her voice, took her in, warmed, fed, comforted her, and eventually married her as by right. The bishop consented to the divorce as having been made by death, and to the remarriage as having been consecrated by love, and faith gained what fear had lost.—Fortnightly Review.

Working on Simple Diet.

A great number of Kashmiri cultivators occupy themselves in spring and autumn in taking goods from the plains to Kashmiri by contract, and on that bargain will exert themselves manfully.

I once arranged my loads for the ordinary coolies, but afterward met with some Kashmiris who were ready to take them by weight. They loaded themselves each with three of the loads that had been made up; one man carried four dozen of beer packed in cases; another load weighed 192 pounds, and I have a well authenticated case of a young man carrying 240 pounds. This was not for a short journey, but for more than 100 miles of uneven road, with many long rises and several passes, one of them over 9,000 feet. In doing such feats as this the Kashmiris take their own time; the ten days' march they spend eighteen or nineteen days upon; but they do it all on a diet of unleavened bread or of rice.—Traveler's Letter.

Novel Method of Feeding.

A prominent market gardener and milkman of South Hadley, Mass., feeds his peddling horses by clock power. The cracked corn and oats are put into a hopper over night, and the alarm clock is set for a morning feed. The contrivance works to a charm, the horses thrive by it, it saves labor in the busiest part of the day and the machine costs about $6.—Boston Budget.

A Boy's Idea.

My little nephew, 5 years old, was talking about the Garden of Eden, and his mamma was telling him about God's forbidding Adam and Eve to eat the apples. The little boy said: "God must have been saving the apples to sell."—Boston Globe.

Defenders of American Industry.

Congress have repeatedly, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.—George Washington.

We must now place our manufactures by the side of the agriculturist. * * Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.—Thomas Jefferson.

Our manufactures require the systematic and fostering care of the government. * * Equally important it is to provide at home a market for our raw materials.—James Monroe.

Upon the success of our manufactures, a the handmaid of agriculture and commerce, depends in a great measure the independence of our country, and none can feel more sensibly than I do the necessity of encouraging them.—Andrew Jackson.

When our manfactures are grown to a certain proportion, as they will under the fostering care of the government, * * the farmer will find a ready market for his surplus produce, and, what is of almost equal consequence, a certain and cheap supply for all his wants.—John C. Calhoun.

An extensive domestic market for the surplus produce of the soil is of the first consequence. It is, of all things, that which most effectually conduces to a flourishing state of agriculture.—Alexander Hamilton.

Every manufacturer encouraged in our country makes part of a market for provisions within ourselves, and saves so much money to the country as must otherwise be exported to pay for the manufactures he supplies.—Benj. Franklin.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

The Lake Shore Railroad.

Considerable surprise has been expressed in certain quarters at the action of the directors of the Boston, Concord & Montreal railroad in subscribing to a large portion of the capital stock in the Lake Shore railroad, and at the proposed construction of the road in the interests of the B., C. & M. The reasons must be obvious, when the situation is considered. It is possible that the suit to determine the validity of the lease of the B., C. & M. R. R. to the Boston & Lowell railroad corporation may be decided in favor of the B., C. & M. R. R. The advocates and legal lights on that side of the case insist that if the court is to be consistent it must adhere to the doctrine which is to be laid down in the opinion in the case of Dow against the Northern railroad—whenever such an opinion is promulgated. The B., C. & M. R. R. restored to the control of its directors, its managers will at once find a piece of property the successful operation of which will depend upon its connections, especially the southerly lines. Perhaps the Concord railroad may be disinclined or legally debarred from leasing the B., C. & M. R. R., especially as leases of this character of late seem to be of an uncertain tenure in our state. The B., C. & M. R. R. managers apparently think it well to have two strings to their bow. They are not inclined to permit the Concord road, under a guise of friendly offices, to disrupt the relations existing under the lease, and then have their road become a bob to the Concord kite. In fine, the B., C. & M. R. R. regards it important to a proper preservation of their rights and privileges to have an outlet toward Boston and tidewater by way of Dover and Portsmouth, as well as by a way over the Concord railroad. True, there may be no such overflowing surplus in the Montreal treasury as would, under ordinary circumstances, warrant the subscription to the new stock of the Lake Shore road. But that this piece of road, economically built, as it can be, and furnished to a great extent by the aid of the motive machinery of the B., C. & M. R. R., may be leased at a fixed rental, is beyond question. As a means enabling the B., C. & M. R. R. to emerge from its cul-de-sac, the outlay is entirely warranted.

"Mortifying" Enough, No Doubt.

This city being a "navy yard town," its residents of course have a vivid remembrance of the earnest talk indulged in by the democracy while out of power in the national government, about the hidious corruption and thievery of the black republicans as illustrated in the management of the navy yards, and the absolute need of a democratic reform triumph before a pure and honest rule in the navy yards could be hoped for. Well, the democratic "reformers" got in; and the sample of purity and honesty they have developed in at least one navy yard is indicated by the following from the Brooklyn, N. Y., Eagle, a democratic paper, which, under the heading "A Thieves' Nest in the Navy Yard," says:

The discovery of a thieves' nest in the navy yard in the middle of a presidential canvass is a mortifying thing enough. The heroic punishment of the theives will be the only and the adequate cure for the damage of the discovery. Yet who has a right to be surprised? When a Tammany Hall or a Brooklyn-gang politician, with no record or objection against stealing himself, can go into the yard and say to line and staff officers: "See here, mister, if you don't put this man on by taking that man off, you'll get bounced mighty soon, 'and don't you forget it,'" is it any wonder that crime nestles and fattens?

It is no answer to say: "It was the same under other administrations." Just so; but this administration was elected to do and be better than the other administrations—and by promising to be and do so. The president, we know, has tried to live up to that promise. The secretary of the navy has peoclaimed his purpose to do so, too. Salting the yard with "heelers" is not doing so. Permitting honorable officers to feel the feet of gang chiefs on their necks is not doing so. Arresting investigations at the point where they threaten to smoke out even higher abominations than the gang is not doing so. Compelling self-respecting officers to ask to be relieved or transferred is not doing so. Hanging up for months the cases of exemplary and prosecuted officials, tried on trumped-up charges, because there was so much prejury committed against them that rancid favorites will have to be punished, if incent gentlemen are acquitted, is not doing so.

The navy yard is a curse to this city. We wish the plant of it were lifted up, carried off and sunk into the sea. Secretary Whitney should realize how his subordinates are compromising him. The president should realize how his administration is being compromised.

Alien Landholders.

Very few people have any idea of the vast areas of government land held by alien landholders in the United States. The largest tract, 4,500,000 acres, is held by the Holland company of New Mexico. An English syndicate holds 3,000,000 acres in Texas; Sir Edward Reid and a syndicate in Florida own 1,000,000 acres; 1,800,000 acres beleng to an English syndicate in Mississippi; 1,700,000 to the marquis of Tweeddale; 1,300,000 to the Phillips-Marshall company of London, and 1,000,000 acres to a German syndicate. These comprise the larger landholders. There are, however, a score or more of persons and syndicates owning less than 750,000 acres. The grand total foots up to 20,747,000 acres of government land held by aliens in the United States. They should be compelled either to become citizens and residents, or sell their vast holdings.

Rousing Ratification Meeting.

The meeting of the Boston republicans to ratify the nomination of Harrison and Morton was held in Tremont Temple on Tuesday evening, July 24th. The meeting was announced to begin at 7:45 o'clock, but long before that hour the building, floor and galleries, was packed by over 4,000 people, and the doors were closed against all new comers, who were turned aside into the Meionaon, where an overflow meeting was held under the leadership of Gen. John L. Swift. The Tremont Temple meeting was addressed by Hon. Frederick L. Burden, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, Lieut. Gov. Brackett, Hon. Thomas B. Reed, Ex-Gov. Robinson and others, and the utmost enthusiasm was manifested.

President Cleveland wiped the beads of perspiration from his throbbing brows Sunday night, and began the paragraph in his message upon the civil service workings. He wrote: "The path of civil service reform has not, at all times, been pleasant or easy." The path is well enough. The trouble is in having a president who faces both ways, and makes the path a hard road to travel.

The New York Saloon Journal has declared for Cleveland. It cannot stand the so-called free whiskey plank in the republican platform, probably.

A farm hand named Dutton was recently employed by John D. Lamont, cousin of Daniel S. Lamont, President Cleveland's private secretary, who lived near Elmira, N. Y. Dutton became enamored of Jennie Rote, a young girl of nineteen who lived at Lamont's as a domestic, but who rejected his love, as she was engaged to marry Lamont. On the night of July 24th Dutton went to Lamont's house, shot him and the young woman fatally, and then fled to the woods and killed himself.

Courtlandt Palmer, one of New York's wealthy men, founder and president of the Century club, who died suddenly a few days ago left orders to have his body cremated. He was a materialist, and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll will deliver his funeral oration to-day.

The Agamont hotel at Bar Harbor took fire in the basement at two o'clock in the morning, July 25th, and was destroyed. It was the oldest hotel at that place. The other buildings near by were saved by the hard work of the fire department.

Henry S. Ives and George H. Staynor have been held in $10,000 each to answer to charges of swindling the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroad company while officers of the road.

Sophie Clementz, aged twenty-eight years, a Swedish lady of means, was drowned by the capsizing of a sailboat in which she was going from Conanicut island to Newport, R. I., July 24th.

Owen O'Brien of Dover, a hop beer manufacturer, while crazed from the effects of hard drinking, on the evening of July 24th shot at several persons with a revolver, wounding one of them, his nephew, in the leg. He was locked up.

A competetive examination for a West Point cadetship from the second congressional district of this state, will be held in Concord shortly.

The great interests of an agricultural, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

WHAT IS

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATTERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

4-PAW AND THE WILD WEST.

Features of the Great Show—Ride of Wagner, the Scout.

The great Forepaugh and Wild West combination, which will exhibit in this city to-morrow, July 27th, afternoon and evening, is fresh from an enormously profitable engagement in Philadelphia, and in speaking of the varied features of this most remarkable tented exhibition, the Philadelphia Press of April 26th says:

"Of the 25,000 people who crowded the tents at Forepaugh's great show yesterday and cheered the battle of the Little Big Horn, few appreciated the fact that the scout in the realistic scene was the bona fied Sergeant Wagner who took General Custer's last orders to Major Reno just before the historical massacre. He has lost one of his legs in war, and daily in the 'play battle,' which is real enough for the most people, takes the same part that he did when things were terribly in earnest. Dr. Carver, who impersonates General Custer, writes his last despatch on Sergeant Warner's shoulder, and charges away to die. The applause given the little trapeze horse Eclipse by the thousands makes the black stallions snort with envy. Europe's star gymnasts, the Eugenes, like the 'blasted' country, and since their appearance the 'blasted' country has yelled its admiration at them. Hundreds of bald-headed gentlemen who 'took the children' yesterday were heard whispering to each other that Julia Lowande, the principal bareback artiste, 'was a daisy.' The show always ends in cheers because the last feat is that of young Adam Forepaugh riding thirty horses around the hippodrome track at Chicago Limited Express gait."

MORE ABOUT DR. WEED.

From Newport, Me., a long story is telegraphed to the Boston papers in regard to Dr. George M. Weed, now awaiting trial on a charge of complicity in the robbery of old Peter Bennett of Newport. This new story is given as the account of Mrs. Luce of Dixmont, Me., widow of Henry B. Luce, and alleges that eleven years ago Mr. Luce was robbed one night of some $300 in cash and $6,000 or $7,000 in papers, under circumstances very similar to those attending the robbery of Peter Bennett, except that no violence was used, none being needed, as Luce and his wife both slept very soundly in consequence of having drank some cider supposed to have been drugged by Dr. Weed, who was at the time a boarder in the house. Mrs. Luce alleges, or is reported to allege, that she afterward learned that the robbery was planned by Dr. Weed and committed by him and a confederate. This may be all true; and it may be only another illustration of the willingness of the human race to kick any of its members who appear to be on the road down hill.

BASE BALL.

The Portsmouth club went to Lynn on Wednesday, July 25th, and defeated the Lynn club, nine to eight, in twelve innings. O'Connor and Coughlin were the Portsmouth battery.

ACCIDENTAL.

A man named Edward Brown, employed on Hon. Frank Jones' farm at Gravelly Ridge, was standing on the hinder end of a load of hay Wednesday forenoon, the 25th inst., when a sudden start made by the oxen threw him to the ground, the shock rendering him insensible for a time. On recovering he was taken to his home in a carriage.

Mr. William T. Dame, painter in the employ of W. J. Sampson & Co., while engaged in painting the Sherburne house on Daniel street, about ten o'clock in the forenoon on Wednesday, the 25th inst., fell with a ladder from the eaves of the second story in the rear of the building, and struck first on the roof of the kitchen, thence falling upon the brick sidewalk. He was dangerously injured, and was taken to the Cottage Hospital.

MARITIME NOTES.

The steam yacht Annie S., belonging to Mr. Fred Pope, a well known architect of Boston, was lying at Philbrick's wharf on Wednesday afternoon, the 25th inst. Mr. Pope prefers during the summer months to cruise along the New England ports, where he can be in easy communication with Boston by telegraph or telephone.

The brick schooners Trinton, J. Chester Wood, Satellite and Estella arrived from Boston on Wednesday, the 23d inst., light, and proceeded up the river to load.

Sloop Addie, of Biddeford, brought in to Joseph H. Jameson on Tuesday of this week a swordfish weighing 420 lbs., which was sold to J. O. Downs & Co. The schooner Lady of the Lake, of Rockport, brought in to Jameson on Wednesday 4000 lbs. of haddock.

Elvin S. Newton of Manchester during the first three days of this week took to his market in that city from Jos. H. Jameson of Commercial wharf 4000 lbs. of haddock.

There was a considerable fleet of loaded brickers, outward bound, lying at the draw piers of Portsmouth bridge on Wednesday afternoon.

Charles H. White on Tuesday, the 24th inst., took thirty dozen cunners, which were sent to Newburyport. On Wednesday he brought up from Little Harbor seventy-five pounds of eels, which met with a ready sale.

The big timber raft was successfully launched at Joggins, Nova Scotia, July 24th. It is 600 feet long, has no masts, and is built on the same general principles as the one last year started out by Mr. Leary, and which has since been floating about the ocean in the form of detached logs. The new danger to navigation contains 21,000 sticks of timber, and its weight is estimated at 11,000 tons. It will be towed to New York by the big ocean tug B. W. Morse, of Bath, Me., or at least that steamer will start with it, whether she gets it to New York or not. Thre is insurance of $50,000 on the clumsy thing.

A lawn party was given at Mr Walter L. Brown's pleasant residence on Broad street, Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The Sunday schools attached to St. John's and Christ churches had a most enjoyable lawn party on the grounds at Christ church, from four to seven o'clock on Wednesday afternoon.

The Court street Christian society and Sunday school had a picnic at Jenness' beach, Rye, on Wednesday.

The Sunday school of the Advent church has a picnic at Kittery Point today, Thursday, going by train leaving the Boston & Maine station at 8:30 o'clock.

A stream of water has within a few days burst forth from the ground near the door of the old Spring market. The water is cool, clear and sparkling, bubbles up abundantly, and runs overboard through a temporary spout. If it should prove to come from a spring, and not from a bursted aqueduct pipe or choked drain, the city authorities should place a permanent pipe there for the convenience of boats wanting water,

The death claims paid by the Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York during the week ending July 19th amounted to $158,432.95, and the matured endowments to $46,822.11.

Deacon Stephen Kimball, who died at Wells, Me., July 15th, had been a thorough republican since the party was organized, and was previously a whig. He was for forty years a deacon of the old First Parish Congregational church of Wells, and was highly esteemed in the community.

Mrs. Albert C. Lynn and daughter Mazie, of Charlestown, Mass., are visiting Mrs. Andrew Lynn on Winter street, this city.

The United States man-of-war Antietam, now lying at League island, is to be offered for sale. The vessel has never been out of the Delaware, and the longest trip she ever made was from the old Philadelphia navy yard, where she was built, to her present quarters at League island. During the last few years she has been allowed to rot, and now lies partially sunk in the mud.

AFFAIRS IN KITTERY.

The widow of Mr. Samuel Norton, who lives on the Norton road, is one of the smartest old ladies in the town. She is eighty-three years old, and is worth a large property; but her ambition is such that during the haying season she worked in the field with her son (against his will) until ten o'clock at night She will work in the garden all day long among her vegetables, taking as much pride in her work as when her husband and children were around fifty years ago.

Mr. Chas. S. Grace took the first blueberrying excursion to York yesterday.

We have great sympathy for our friends at Dog Corner, York, and hope after they get through with their "sausage business" there they will come to the Point and continue their good work; we have a promising field for a plentiful harvest.

UNCLE MOSES.

A Fastidious Man's Misfortune.

Illustrating the additional aggravation which objectionable attendant circumstances yield to the victim of an accident, the Saunterer recalls a story told him some time ago by the genial B. P. Shillaber, the well known Mrs. Partington. A certain prominent and fastidious Bostonian had the misfortune to be knocked down and run over by a city scavenger wagon, by which one of his legs was broken. While he was at the City hospital, a friend called to express his sorrow for the unfortunate gentleman, expressing his regret particularly at the extent of the other's injury. The sufferer heaved a deep sigh, and then, turning to his visitor, said: "Yes, George, it's mighty hard. It's bad enough to be knocked down, run over, and have one's leg broken, surely; but, oh, heavens! for a man of my cloth to be knocked down, run over and my leg broken by a filthy swill cart—the thought is unbearable!" —Boston Budget "Saunterer."

The Cabman at Midnight.

The row of cabs and Jehus on the west side of Union square at midnight presents a curious picture of human life in the winter season. The patient horses stand and freeze without protest. The drivers keep arms and legs in motion, and flock together for company. But they don't talk. On a very cold night an experienced cabman will only part his lips a quarter of an inch to say "Keb, s'r!" If he said "Cab, sir," the mouth would have to be opened at least half an inch, "E" having the flattest of the vowel sounds. No cabman will refuse, however, to talk volubly on the icicle evening in a dispute over fare. It warms him up, too.—New York Sun.

In Dr. Younger's experiment the tooth to be replaced has long been extracted, and the socket filled up with bony substance. He drills into the jaw, gouges out a new socket, and then, taking a tooth that has long been extracted, he cleans it thoroughly, soaks it in bichloride of mercury, and inserts it in the socket just formed. This new tooth in due time becomes firmly anchored, and as serviceable as the original one before it became decayed. Dr. Younger holds that the tooth is held in its place by the soft tissues surrounding it, and that the artificial socket has nothing to do with anchoring it.

The experiment described above was performed by Dr. G. M. Curtis, of Syracuse, N. Y., who afterward extracted the implanted tooth, and sent it to Dr. W. M. Gray, the microscopist of the surgeon general's office, who has made a very careful examination of it. His experiments proved beyond question that the tooth so implanted is revived, the circulation is established between the socket and the implanted tooth, and that the socket does take an active part in anchoring the tooth. A tooth so implanted is much more firmly anchored in the jaw than one of the originals, and, in the case referred to, the tooth was held so firmly that Dr. Curtis broke it in extracting it. Dr. Gray does not doubt that the soft tissues do take an active part in the operation, but he has proved his propositions in regard to the bone and the tooth beyond all question.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Glass Cups from Venice.

The first glass cups came from Venice during the Sixteenth century, and from that time on society began to lose many of its primitive ways and become, in a sense, more refined.—Boston Budget.

Want of Sleep

Is sending thousands annually to the insane asylum; and the doctors say this trouble is alarmingly on the increase. The usual remedies, while they may give temporary relief, are likely to do more harm than good. What is needed is an Alterative and Blood-purifier. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is incomparably the best. It corrects those disturbances in the circulation which cause sleeplessness, gives increased vitality, and restores the nervous system to a healthful condition.

Rev. T. G. A. Coté, agent of the Mass. Home Missionary Society, writes that his stomach was out of order, his sleep very often disturbed, and some impurity of the blood manifest; but that a perfect cure was obtained by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frederick W. Pratt, 424 Washington street, Boston, writes: "My daughter was prostrated with nervous debility. Ayer's Sarsaparilla restored her to health."

William F. Bowker, Erie, Pa., was cured of nervousness and sleeplessness by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for about two months, during which time his weight increased over twenty pounds.

Secure from Harm

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieve cramps and pains, prevent indigestion, destroy disease germs in water drunk, restore the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, break up colds and fevers, and ward off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

Neveral travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often disuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from wear.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

Schools Where Girls Receive Gratuitous Instruction—The Studies Pursued.

In a recent number of The Revue des Deux Mondes the present state of female education in France is carefully examined from the hygienic point of view by Dr. Jules Rochard, an eminent member of the Paris Academy of Medicine. The system of instruction for girls in the French public schools is impugned upon the ground that the mental work imposed upon them is too hard and too uninterrupted, and that sufficient heed is not paid to physical culture. Dr. Rochard considers the playground and the gymnasium quite as indispensable features of a girls' school as the recitation room. Many measures calculated to promote the health of pupils are suggested, and among those which, it is urged, should be carried out at home or in boarding schools and convents, is the daily practice of bathing the whole person in cold water. We learn from Dr. Rochard that this mode of bathing still meets with very little favor even in the families of the French aristocracy, notwithstanding their inclination to adopt many English ways.

Aside, however, from the effect of the new school system on the health of the pupils—a question which is just now exciting particular attention in Paris—the article in The Revue contains some interesting statistics, showing the progress made under the third republic in the education of girls, a branch of public duty which, under previous regimes, had been much neglected. Thus it appears that at the date of the last census, published in 1882, there were in France 80,409 schools for girls and 17,738 schools to which very young children of both sexes were admitted. The aggregate number of female pupils was 2,481,024, and this, it is estimated, has by this time increased by about 500,000. The system of organization and instruction is the outcome of laws passed in October, 1886, and January, 1887. The schools where girls receive gratuitous instruction are, first, maternal schools; secondly, infant schools; thirdly, primary schools, and finally, the normal schools for those who mean to become teachers.

The so called maternal schools were intended to replace the former asylum halls. The latter were hardly more than nurseries, in which hard working families placed their children to get rid of taking care of them during the day. In them education amounted to nothing. On the other hand, their substitutes were designed to be a kind of kindargartens, where a child's faculties might be awakened by attractive exercises and object lessons. But as yet the purpose has not been fully carried out, owing to the difficulty of obtaining qualified teachers. To these maternal schools children of both sexes are admitted between the ages of 2 and 6. The scheme of instruction is supposed to include games and graduated movements, accompanied by singing—no doubt French counterparts of "The farmer sows his seed" performance—manual exercise, the first principles of moral education, the rudiments of useful knowledge, training in the use of language enlivened with the recital of tales, the elements of drawing, reading, writing and arithmetic.

The infant schools represent an intermediate degree between the maternal schools and the primary schools proper. Children of both sexes are admitted from the ages of 4 to 7. The scope of instruction here comprehends that of the maternal schools together with the elementary course of primary schools. The latter receive little girls from the age of 6, if they come from a maternal school and of 7 if they come from an infant school. The pupils remain until they are 14. The studies are distributed in three courses: The elementary course for children from 7 to 9, the middle course for those from 9 to 11, the upper course for those from 11 to 13.

In the primary schools proper the sexes, as we have said, are separated. The tuition given to the girls includes, first, instruction in morals and civic duties; secondly, reading and writing; thirdly, the French language; fourthly, arithmetic and the metric system; fifthly, history and geography, especially with relation to France; sixthly, object lessons and primary scientific notions; seventhly, the elements of drawing, painting and needlework. After having received this instruction female pupils of the primary schools may complete it by passing two years in the two lower classes of the normal schools. There they learn applied arithmetic; the elements of algebra and of geometry; the methods of ordinary accounting and bookkeeping; the rudiments of physical science and natural history; geometrical drawing, decorative drawing, and modeling lessons in every day law and political economy; lessons in French history and literature; the principal epochs of general history, with especial reference to modern times; industrial and commercial geography; living languages; needlework and dressmaking.

On the upper classes of the normal schools we do not touch, because they are exclusively devoted to the preparation of professional school teachers.—New York Sun.

The Fearless Athabaskan Tribes.

But while the Aleuts are tending toward civilization, if they are not actually "Christianized," the reverse is the case with the tribes of Athabaskan Indians, who people the Yukon valley, and are found also in some numbers in both the Kuskokvim and Kadiak divisions. They are distinctly a branch of the great race of North American Indians, which extends from the Mackenzie river in the north of the continent to Mexico in the south. At what period they migrated from the interior of the inclement regions of Alaska, it is impossible to say, and their traditions do not help us to guess. They have certainly kept themselves very much to themselves, and have neither intermixed to any great extent with the Eskimos and Aleuts, nor have, until quite recently, held much intercourse with the Russian and American representatives of the white races. As they are now, they probably have been for hundreds, perhaps thousands of years—nomadic, reserved, self-contained, active, hard, keen sighted and fearless—skilful in the chase, and cruel and treacherous in war.—Chambers' Journal.

The Jots and Tittles.

A manuscript was submitted for examination the other day and was so peculiar as to be absolutely illegible. Nothing but the i dotting indicated which side was up and which was down. You see how important it is to give the eye all that belongs to it.—Syracuse Christian Advocate.

Too Strong to Resist.

Sick Man (to wife)—If I should die, would you marry again?

Wife (sobbing)—Oh, I think not, John; but your life is insured for $20,000, you know, and no doubt I should have very strong pressure to resist.—The Epoch.

A Startling Innovation.

Frank R. Stockton, that popular novelist of infinite quaint humors, is held responsible for a most startling innovation in the way of wedding trips, recently introduced in Washington. After a certain wedding ceremony, at which Mr. Stockton was present, instead of the young couple going on a wedding trip, the bride's parents were showered with rice and old slippers and banished on a two weeks' exile, while the bride and groom were left in possession of the house.—Frank Leslie's.

I suffered for a long time from a severe, hacking cough, which was pronounced by a skillful physician to be dangerous and liable to terminate in consumption. I was completely cured by using Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.—Henry A. Bean, Lawrence, Mass.

A member of the house of commons was suspended for one month for criticising the speaker in a letter to a newspaper.

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called a "cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

Ladies Who Bloat.

Not a particle of calomel, nor any other deleterious substance, enters into the composition of Ayer's Pills. On the contrary, this medicine is carefully compounded from the curative properties of purely vegetable substances. Try it.

In Paris there are people who make a living waking people up in the morning. Come to think about it, there are people in this country who make a living in the same kind of business. They also sell milk.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous bo your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

How to Kill Wolves.

The natives of the Arctic regions have a barbarous, but effective, way of dealing with the wolves which are a pest there. Sharp blades are stuck in the ice and baited. The meat freezes, and in thawing it out with his tongue the blade cuts the tongue, ultimately preventing the beast from licking the snow, and thirst finally kills the animal.—Chicago Herald.

The Spanish Peanut.

The Spanish peanut is now very extensively used in Georgia for feeding to hogs. It is stated that the average crop is 125 bushels per acre. The hogs do all the harvesting, and they generally eat the vines as well as the nuts. It is estimated that an acre of Spanish peanuts will furnish four times as much hog food as an acre of corn.—Chicago Times.

When They Leave Us.

The exodus of our bodily troubles is doubly welcome if their departure is unaccompanied by pain. It is the fault of the best of commendable cathartics, which act solely upon the bowels, that in operation they gripe and weaken these organs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters produce a laxative effect, but neither causes pain nor weaken the abdominal region or the stomach. This is pre-eminently the alterative which a constipated, billious or dyspeptic person should use, since a resort to it involves no bodily discomfort nor a violent reaction. The liver is aroused, the stomach benefitted, and the habit of body speedily and permanently improved by it. Fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles are among the maladies for which recorded experience has proved it to be efficacious. It is a wholesome appetizer, and a far more reliable tranquillizer of the nerves than stomach-disturbing narcotics and sedatives.

There are some men who would plant boot-trees with the expectation of raising boots.

THE ORIOLE.

In and out 'mong the cherry leaves
Flashing—a dart of living flame—
He sings, and his glad song never grieves;
His merry refrain is e'er the same:
"Cheer, cheer, cheer,
Cheer up,
Cheer!"

In the dim, gray light of early dawn
He carols awake the laggard sun;
When evening shadows stretch o'er the lawn
His vesper warblings can scarce be done:
"Cheer, cheer, cheer,
Cheer up,
Cheer!"

"There's a pendant nest in the cherry tree,
A grave little mate and birdlings four;
How can you leave them to sing," and he
A-tilting and swaying but sings the more:
"Cheer, cheer, cheer,
Cheer up,
Cheer!"

"There's plenty of time in this world to sing,"
His black head bobs as much as to say—
And then how the ling'ring echoes ring
As he flutters his wings and flies away:
"Cheer, cheer, cheer,
Cheer up,
Cheer!"

Oriole, with your breast of flame,
And notes that are ever so clearly glad,
Thro' sun or shade you sing the same,
If life be bright or if life be sad:
"Cheer, cheer, cheer,
Cheer up,
Cheer!"

BILL JENKS' STORY.

It was late in October, and the mountain air was chilly, but the fire which we had built, and which reached up with its long tongues of flame half way to the dark pine top above, made the camp comfortable. We had stopped for the night just off the great Deadwood trail, a dozen miles from that place—that great wagon road which leads from the gold mines to civilization, over 200 miles among mountains and across plains, over government land and through Indian reservations.

"I'm goin' to bed an' to sleep tonight," said Gene Brooks, a freighter, with three great freight wagons and twelve mules, which he drove alone, as is customary; "I set up all last night tellin' you fellers stories, but you can't rope me in that way to-night." We had fallen in with Gene on the trail the day before. We looked at the fire, now burning lower, as we listened to the night wind, unfelt below, singing through the pine tops the same low, sad refrain which the wind and the pines ever sing.

"Hanged if there ain't a stray mule," said Gene, as he strained his eyes through the darkness toward the trail. "Looks some like one of Bill Jenks' leaders, too, but Bill don't let none of his mules get away. 'Sides, he's gone to Sundance this trip, though it must be 'bout time for him to get back—he hurries 'long kinder fast now—he gets lonesome, I reckon. I b'lieve I must tell you 'bout Bill 'fore I forget it," and Gene cut off a chew of tobacco with a pocketknife and rolled over and kicked his toes into the ground as he gazed at the fire, while the pines ceased their complaining song for a moment, and the murmuring of Bear Butte creek came to our ears as it bubbled along over the rocks a few yards away, all grayish, milky white, muddled by the silver mining along its head waters in the Galena district—all the streams in the Black Hills run either the same grayish, milk white or blood red—silver or gold mining.

"You heard me mention Bill last night," went on Gene. "He's a good one—ain't 'fraid of nothing that walks. Been freghtin' ever since I have—nine year. Got a twelve mule outfit—three wagons. Bill ain't exactly quarrelsome, but if he has got anything agin' anybody he don't go round tryin' to forget it. More likely he jumps the feller an' cleans him out. Bill ain't never been licked on the trail. Carries a gun in the wagon to use in cases of necessity. Good feller if you know how to take him—I never had no trouble with him—but a little queer an' not a man to monkey with 'less you're lookin' for mighty lively exercise."

Gene meditatively took off his hat and blew the dust from the wide brim—the red, powdery dust of the trail, the dust that is blown hither and thither, on everything, through everything; that is stirred by the treasure coach and passenger coach, mule train and bull train, by the passing breeze and the gale as it sweeps down out of the canyon and whirls it along in great clouds that shut from sight coach and wagon train, dusty passenger and dustier driver. Then he began again:

"Well, 'bout two year ago we was all freightin' from Pierre—nearest railroad town then, you know. Them was lively times at Pierre. Killed a man every night, buried him the nex' mornin', or mebby the day after, 'cordin' to how busy they was.

"There was a girl at Pierre named Pearl Queen. Least that's what the bills said her name was, though I al'ays thought it was a little mixed 'bout it bein' right. She acted at the Alhambra theatre, you see. Danced on her toes remarkably pretty like. She'd been there some time, and we all knowed her more or less. She was a little thing, middin' young, I jedged, though I al'ays calculated she looked a little sort o' faded. She was kinder quiet, though she had a pertty peart look, too. They said she shot a feller at Sidney, but Pete Ferris said it wa'n't her a tall, so I don't know nothing 'bout it.

"Anyhow, Bill Jenks got a'quainted with her one trip, and they jess seemed to muchu'ly fall in love with each other at first sight. Well, we didn't pay no attention to this, but we wa'n't quite ready for what follered. Bill got a load of merch'ndise for Lead City, an' the nex' mornin' pulled out, an' the p'int is right here: Settin' up on the saddle on the near white mule was Pearl Queen, jes' 'sif she'd al'ays been there; an' Bill was walkin' 'longside, mebby a little closer'n gen'ral, swearin' at the mules jes' 'sif he never pulled out no other way.

"Well, we all looked an' that's 'bout all we did do when we see 'em comin'—there happened to be quite a lot of us in camp there an' we was jes' hookin' up—Bill had camped down by the freight house. Pearl had on a new calliker dress, mostly red and pretty like, an' I noticed she 'peared rather better lookin' than gen'ral, I thought. Big Smith was smart Alec, an' a fightin' man, an' didn't like Bill none too well, nohow. He steps up when they comes along, an' says he: 'Mornin', Bill.' 'Mornin', Big Smith,' says Bill, and stops his team. 'I see you got Pearl Queen with you,' says Big Smith. 'It does 'pear that way,' says Bill. 'I b'lieve I'm somewhat a'quainted with Pearl myself,' says Big Smith, kinder smart like. 'I 'low you don't know anything bad 'bout her,' says Bill, bitin' his teeth together hard. 'Well, I'— Crack! an' Bill hit him one on the jaw so we could all hear it, sayin' at the same time: 'What is it you know?' Big Smith fell like a log an' lay there for 'most a minute, Bill all the time waitin' for an answer. Pertty soon Big Smith got so he could kinder roll a little, an' then said: 'Bill it ain't worth mentionin'!' Then Bill whistled to his mules and went on.

"Nothing but fights for Bill Jenks after that. He had to stop an' lick the man that kep' the Red Corral 'fore he got out o' town, and he pounded two freighters at Willow Creek, an' at Bad River he an' the man that run the road ranch there fit twenty minutes, an' Bill finally got him up on the bank of the stream an' shoved him in an' that settled him. He would meet a man, the man would say something about Pearl or go to grinnin', an' Bill would stop an' step up an' whale him, come back, kinder mop off the thickest of the blood with his sleeve, swear at the mules an' go on, while Pearl reached down an' patted him on the shoulder an' cheered him up.

"Pearl stayed with him right along. She didn't ride on the mule so much after the first trip 'cept when they were goin' inter town, when Bill always had her ride it, so that if there was anybody 'round wanted to make any remarks, that she would 'tract their 'tention an' they would make 'em, an' Bill would stop an' have it out with 'em. But it wasn't long 'fore folks got over sayin' much in Bill's hearin'—awful unhealthy practice. One day when they was pullin' into Rapid City one of these pictur' men tried to take their pictur' with Pearl on the mule, but Bill caught him at it an' went over an' kicked one o' the legs off his outfit, an' as that only left two on it, it didn't stand very steady, an' the cuss looked kinder sheepish, put it under his arm an' made a sneak.

"Bill al'ays fixed her up a nice place to ride in the trail wagon, an' when she wasn't there or on the mule she would walk 'long by his side. I s'pose it was very pleasant for her to hear Bill swearin' at the mules all day, 'cause she thought a heap of him. When one o' the rest of us camps, of course we al'ays have to rustle 'round an' cook our own bacon, but she done his cookin' right along, an' good cookin' it was too, 'cause Bill asked me to eat with them sev'ral times. Biscuits w'y she used to make biscuits that tasted, w'y, durn it all, they tasted 'most like they used to at home! Bill an' Pearl al'ays got along powerful fine together. They wasn't married reg'lar, you know. Bill said he didn't believe in any such monkey business, an' I reckon she didn't neither, but Bill told me it was going to be a steady thing, an' it was.

"Well, it was a hard life for the girl, al'ays on the road—cold an' stormy through the winter an' hot and dusty when summer come—never sleepin' in a house an' not hardly ever being in one at all, 'cept occasionally mebby a store, or freight depot, or something. But she seemed to stand it first rate an' not want nothin' else. Bill was mighty careful 'bout her stayin' in the wagon an' keep' in' warm in cold or rainy weather, so I dunno, mebby the life was 'bout as easy as any she was used to. Her 'n Bill was al'ays happy anyhow, an' I s'pose that's a better record than some folks that live finer an' are more solider married can show.

"Well, I reckon there aint so very much more to tell, though it's kinder hard work to tell it a tall. One night, way 'long this summer I camped back here, near Sturgis. I got up early and pulled out for Deadwood, not thinkin' 'bout anything. I'd gone six or seven mile an' was gittin' 'long fine, when I come 'round a bend in the road right 'mong the biggest of the mountains, when what should I see but Bill Jenks' outfit camped ahead a ways. It wa'n't no reg'lar campin' place, an' I couldn't make it out at first, but then I see Bill a-walkin' back'ards an' fur'ards side o' the wagon with something white in his arms, an' then, says I, 'I know what's up. Git, you mules!' An' I clim' on the near one an' hit each of 'em a crack with the whip, an' I'll be hanged if I didn't come up to where he was on the trot! I stopped an' was goin' to yell, an' then I thought I hadn't better 'cause it might not be the thing for such an occasion. Then I was glad I didn't, 'cause as Bill come over, I saw tears in his eyes. First I thought he felt bad, then I 'lowed he was glad, then I didn't know; but Bill steps up side the mule an' I'll be teetotally blanked—yes, sir, I will—if he didn't turn back some sort o' soft cloth on the bundle an' showed me the all-firdest, blankest, smallest, little cuss—baby, you know—that you ever seen! That's what he done, an' my eyes stuck out a foot, though I knowed, soon as I seen Bill walkin' what was comin', too. Then says Bill: 'Gene, that's my boy. Don't he look jes' like me?' I was stuck for a minute 'cause I couldn't see's it looked like anything 'cept jes' baby, but I braced up, an' says I: 'Bill, he's the pictur' of you 'cept his eyes—he's got his mother's eyes.' 'Yes,' says Bill, 'his mother's eyes, an' mebbe her hair, too, only, it's awful short.' Then I started to say something, but Bill stopped me, an' says he: 'Pearl is awful sick, an' I want you to get onto one o' my mules an' ride on to Deadwood an' git a doctor to come down.'

"So I done so, goin' 'bout as quick as anybody ever did with a mule that was kinder set ag'in goin' anyhow, an' got back 'way ahead o' the doctor. When I come up there was nobody in sight. I waited a minute an' didn't hear nothin'. Then I tapped a little on the trail wagon an' Bill said, 'Come in,' sorter choked like, an' I put my head under the canvas at the back end.

"There sat Bill on the bottom of the wagon box with the baby on one arm, while he was lookin' down at Pearl—her head way a-layin' in his lap an' her face was so white that it scared me. Then she opened her eyes, an' at first they was big an' wild like, but they got softer an'

FOR PRESIDENT,

OF INDIANA.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

LEVI P. MORTON

OF NEW YORK.

Defenders of American Industry.

Congress have repeatedly, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.—George Washington.

We must now place our manufactures by the side of the agriculturist. * * Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.—Thomas Jefferson.

Our manufactures require the systematic and fostering care of the government. * * Equally important it is to provide at home a market for our raw materials.—James Monroe.

The great interests of an agricultual, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

Upon the success of our manufactures, as the handmaid of agriculture and commerce, depends in a great measure the independence of our country, and none can feel more sensibly than I do the necessity of encouraging them.—Andrew Jackson.

When our manfactures are grown to a certain proportion, as they will under the fostering care of the government, * * the farmer will find a ready market for his surplus produce, and, what is of almost equal consequence, a certain and cheap supply for all his wants.—John C. Calhoun.

An extensive domestic market for the surplus produce of the soil is of the first consequence. It is, of all things, that which most effectually conduces to a flourishing state of agriculture.—Alexander Hamilton.

Every manufacturer encouraged in our country makes part of a market for provisions within ourselves, and saves so much money to the country as must otherwise be exported to pay for the manufactures he supplies.—Benj. Franklin.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

The Yellowstone National Park.

Two excursions to the Wonderland of America—the Yellowstone National Park—are announced by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb, the dates of departure from Boston being August 20th and September 10th. These tours are planned for the purpose of making a very thorough sight-seeing round of that remarkable region, and ample time is afforded, so as to make the journey in easy stages, with restful halts by the way. The parties will be limited in numbers, and will be under the guidance of experienced conductors, so that ladies need have no hesitation in making the trip without escorts. Circulars descriptive of the route (and also circulars of the tours through Colorado and of the "Six August Trips") may be obtained of W. Raymond, 296 Washington street, opposite School street, Boston.

New Hampshire Items.

Owen O'Brien, of Dover, has been held in $2,000 for trial on a charge of assault with intent to kill, and in $200 for resisting an officer in the execution of his duty. He will lie in jail until September.

George W. Buss has been appointed postmaster at East Acworth, this state, and Orlando C. Neal at South Windham.

William Wiggin of Danvers, Mass., was committed to the New Hampshire state prison in February, 1884, to serve a five years sentence for stealing a horse at Rochester. With the allowance for good behavior his term expired Monday, July 23d, but he was immediately arrested, taken to Lawrence, Mass., and bound over to the October term of the superior court on a charge of escaping from the Salem, Mass., jail on Sept. 2d, 1883, while awaiting trial for larceny.

Tuesday afternoon, July 24th, Orrin Kenniston of Newmarket, who had been in Exeter jail since April, was let out, went home, and proceeded to turn down liquor until he placed himself in a delightful condition of intoxication. He then went to his boarding house and commenced to try to run it according to his ideas, as a persuader brandishing an empty revolver to scare the bosses. He had it all his own way until the majesty of the law appeared in the person of Officer Arthur Chesley, who quickly quieted him and carried him to the police station, where he stayed all night in durance vile. Wednesday morning he was taken before Justice Mellows, and held in $600 for the supreme court in this city in October; but he thought he had been in jail as long as he cared for, at present, so before three o'clock Wednesday afternoon he removed the bars from his cell window, and departed.

"Turn The rascals Out."

The reform administration managed to pay the counsel in the Pan-Electric suits, in spite of the refusal of Congress to make an appropriation of public money to be expended in a law suit for the benefit of private individuals. The honest Garland just took it out of the fund appropriated to pay district attorneys, and then discovered a deficiency of $40,000 in the pay of these salaried officers, for which an appropriation is asked! Mr. Cleveland's administration, while boasting of its honesty, is the most corrupt regime this country has seen since the days of Van Buren.

When Mr. Depew was mentioned as a possible republican candidate for president the democratic editors held their breath in order to ejaculate us powerfully as possible against "monopolies, corporate powers, railway magnates" and the like. Some of the party even thought it best to place its fortunes in the hands of that eminent granger, Frank Jones, that its policy might be removed from railroad influence! Later, however, the democratic leaders selected a western millionaire who is up to his neck in railroads, as the manager of their campaign. The fears as to Depew have been allayed.

Gallery of Photographs.

Public galleries given up exclusively to photographs are unknown in this city. Vienna and Paris are said each to possess one, and people who have seen them say they are interesting in the extreme. Prominent art lovers have just formed a plan for the establishment of such a gallery in this country. It is to contain original photographs of all the great statesmen, soldiers, authors and actors of the world, and as far as possible the plates from which the photographs were taken are to be bought by the manager of the gallery, so that prints from them may be identified with the new enterprise. Dead celebrities, like Adelaide Neilson, for example, are to be represented by photographs from the best negative now extant, which is then to be bought for the exclusive use of the gallery.—New York Press "Every Day Talk."

Glasgow's New Illuminant.

It is quite possible that we have not come to the end of illuminating projects, and that the use of electricity may not supersede all other materials. Glasgow has recently witnessed the test of a new illuminant of extraordinary power. It is obtained by the evaporation of tar, creosote, or other hydro-carbon oils. The flame is pure white, very intense and can be carried up to 3,000 candle power. The expense is two cents per hour per 1,000 candle power. It is in the production of artificial light and heat that civilization has for the last twenty-five years most notably marked progress. It is on the same line we shall move for some time to come. The end will be free fuel and free lights for the people as we now have free air.—Globe-Democrat.

Scandinavians in Minnesota.

In forecasting what sort of a state Minnesota is to be, the Scandinavian is a largely determining force. It is a virile element. The traveler is impressed with the idea that the women whom he sees at the stations in the country and in the city steeets are sturdy, ruddy and better able to endure the protracted season of cold and the highly stimulating atmosphere than the American born women, who tend to become nervous in these climatic conditions. The Swedes are thrifty, taking eagerly to politics, and as ready to profit by them as anybody; unreservedly American in intention, and, on the whole, good citizens.—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's.

They All Chew Gum.

It is said that the biggest business on the stands of the elevated railroads, after the sale of the daily papers, is the traffic in chewing gum, which is "chewed" as a supposed remedy for dyspepsia, which seems to be a national complaint, is always sure of a large sale while it continues in vogue. The day of each nostrum, however, is limited, as novelties in the lines are always coming out. Large fortunes have been made in the manufacturing of dyspepsia remedies since the days of Plantation Bitters.—New York Times.

The average Mexican laborer supports his family on ten cents per diem, invested in corn and beans.

WHAT IS

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

MARITIME NOTES.

The steamer Puritan, the largest side-wheel steamer in the world, was launched at Chester, Pa., July 25th. She will run in the Old Colony line between Boston and New York.

The big Nova Scotia timber raft contains 30,000 logs instead of 21,000 as first stated, and seventy-five tons of steel-wire rope was used in its construction. The tugs Underwriter and Storm King will tow it on its way to New York, and not the B. W. Morse.

The city council of Portland has unanimously assented to a lease of the Portland & Ogdensburg railroad to the Maine Central road for a term of ninety-nine years. The city of Portland is a large holder of stock in the Portland & Ogdensburg.

The Riforma of Rome has an article on the agitation that is being carried on in the United States against Italian immigration. The Riforma says that the movement in question is based solely upon an unreasonable hatred of the Italian element, and that public opinion in Italy will not allow the question to drop.

In Chicago, July 25th, Hronek, Chapek, Chleboun and Sevic, the four alleged anarchists and dynamiters, were indicted for conspiracy to commit murder. It is not thought that the indictment against Chleboun will be pressed, in consideration of the information he has given to the police.

The convention of colored democrats assembled July 25th at Indianapolis to indorse Cleveland. They commenced with a grand row.

One of the good signs of the times is the fact that for nearly two years while their synagogue was building, the Temple Israel congregation of St. Louis, Mo., worshipped in the First Christian church of that city. In returning thanks for this hospitality, Rabbi Sonneschein characterized it as "one of those precious links in the golden chain of mutual recognition which, which under the fostering arms of American civilization, reconciles the disciples of Moses to the disciples of Jesus." He closed by invoking God's blessing on the church and all its aims.

Cora Beard of Lowell, Mass., arrested on a charge of stealing from her employer, George Morrison, a dry goods dealer, was discharged by the court. Letters from Morrison to Miss Beard which she produced in court, did the business.

The August "Lippincott" opens with an unusually strong novel by Maud Howe, entitled "Mammon," which has a vigorous and stirring plot, and is interesting as a return to that satirical vein which the author first opened in her maiden effort, "A Newport Aquarelle." W. H. Babcock gives a very pleasant description and historical sketch of "The Eastern Shore of Maryland," with which this author is intimately acquainted. An excellent autobiographical sketch, "My Reasons for Becoming a Woman-Suffragist," is by Elizabeth L. Saxon, well known as an advocate and lecturer on the woman question. One of the most interesting features is the close of the prize competition, which began in the February number, and the announcement of the winners' names with the standing of all the competitors. The poetry is by Frank Dempster Seerman, Clinton Scollard, and William H. Hayne. The departments keep up their interest.

Revolution IN THE WASH TUB.

In the homes where PYLE'S PEARLINE is used the wash tub is no longer the fountain of drudgery, backaches, pains, sickness, bad temper and upset households. The rubbing and straining process of freeing the dirt wrecks the woman and the clothes, and, at the end of the wash day, life seems hardly worth living. Not so where PEARLINE does the work—that's just it, PEARLINE does the work for you—does it better and quicker, and without rubbing; hence, without the wear and tear to yourself or your clothes.
Warranted harmless. Millions use it. Sold everywhere.

A NEW POLITICAL ENTERPRISE.

The administration desires that the Dover democrats shall be furnished with better political ideas than those in which they have for some time past been educated. There have been suggestions in certain quarters that a paper like Foster's Democrat, which not only sees the big blunder in Cleveland's free-trade messages, but is able to predict its effects with the certainty with which the mathematician figures out the precise hour of a coming eclipse, is not the proper political pabulum for the faithful at the head of navigation. Under this unfavorable condition of things, the plan is to cheer the clouded minds of the Dover faithful with light from State street Our enterprising neighbor has discovered a new field of missionary work. For this discover of a plan by which money can be made by publishing a democratic daily paper at one cent a copy, steam is too slow. The great bulk of afternoon editions will be sent by relays of pony express, making close connection with the Dover horse railroad at Sawyers Mills, and thence by street car to the city hall, where the Cocheco crowd will be served with the news and political essays in which the Times abounds, early in the afternoon. The sturdy democrats of Dover, it is contended, will no longer be liable to be seduced from the true faith by the seductions of Foster's sophistries. Things will be kept in line by the well considered and logical leaders of Col. Cole on the tariff issue. They will be posted in all the seaside gossip. They will be informed of what the administration does, intends to do, and expects its adherents to do. True, while they may be deprived of much they would have learned by the perusal of Foster's,—which though of a different school in politics from ours, we must concede is a very ably edited paper,—yet they will have the advantage of sound free-trade democratic doctrine daily demonstrated, in the study of the Times. We are proud of this display of newspaper enterprise. We are glad our neighbors in Dover can have the same advantages as our own people enjoy, in the way of reading the latest telegraphic news received by wire in our city, and sold at prices which defy competition. The movement will doubtless prove a success. What is there to hinder? When capital and brains unite in pushing a paper, what can prevent the achievement of the desired result? For the present, at least, we presume the Dover afternoon papers will continue their publication, with a limited circulation. Whether the recalcitration of Foster will ere long cease, and like the prodigal son he will return to the homestead of Cleveland democracy and take his chances at having a ring placed upon him, we have our doubts. Foster is sui generis. There never was but one Foster, and in all their attempts to control him the democracy have conceded that they were glad there were no more of the kind.

BASE BALL.

At a meeting of the Dover base ball syndicate, held on the evening of July 24th, it was voted that a public auction of the lumber of the ball field fence and grandstand should be held August 1st.

The report of the Portsmouth-Lynn game in Lynn on July 25th says: "the home team was outbatted and outfielded, especially during the last six innings." The following was the score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
Portsmouth....	0	0	0	0	1	4	0	2	0	0	0	2	—9
Worcester.....	0	0	0	1	0	4	2	0	0	0	1	—8

Sam LaRocque, captain of the Lynn base ball club, has been "sold" to the Detroit club, of the National league.

The first championship game between the Manchesters and Portsmouths will take place this afternoon on the South street field; game called at 3:30 o'clock.

ACCIDENTAL.

Two boys about fifteen years old, named Wardwell and Wright, were playing with a rifle on the 25th inst., when it was accidentally discharged, the bullet lodging in Wright's neck. The wound is not dangerous unles blood poisoning sets in. The injured boy is a son of David Wright.

William Littlefield, of Wells, Me., while taking down a shingling stage from the roof of Orlando Young's new house on Ham street, Dover, July 25th, was precipated to the ground, a distance of twenty-five feet, by the giving way of the staging, and was badly hurt. He struck on his back and side, bit his tongue nearly off and had three teeth knocked out, and was so badly jarred that some hours later he could not move his legs. Internal and spinal injuries were feared.

A VETERAN DEPARTED.

Hon. Increase Sumner Kimball, the oldest member of the York county bar, died at his home in Sanford, York county Me., shortly after midnight on the night of July 25th, at the age of eighty-seven years and eleven months. He represented Lebanon in the state legislature in 1833-34, declining a renomination in '35. He was the youngest member of Gov. Kent's famous council in 1840; represented Sanford in the legislature in 1860, and during the last three years of the rebellion served as county attorney. His son, Sumner Increase Kimball, is the energetic and invaluable chief of the United States life saving service.

"CIRCUS DAY."

This forenoon at ten o'lclock the grand street parade of the Forepaugh and Wild West show will take place, starting from the show grounds on Middle street, and passing through Middle, State, Pleasant, Market, Deer, High, Congress, Islington and Cass streets to the grounds again. Mr. Forepaugh is acknowlegded to stand at the head of the showmen of the world. Aside from this, our exchanges in Maine, and in Dover (where the vast combination exhibited yesterday) endorse not only the show, but the street parade, as the best ever seen in their respective cities. In the procession are bands, cowboys, Indians, scouts, animal dens, male and female riders, twelve elephants, a genuine Overland Stage Co.'s coach driven by one of the company's old drivers, ponies, trick mules, stallions. The elephants will be led by Bolivar, the largest elephant now in captivity. Exhibitions afternoon and evening.

NEIGHBORLY CONSOLATION.

One neighbors of Dover—that is, the base ball cranks among our neighbors of Dover—feel very badly over the fact that the Portsmouth club lost three of the first four games played by them in the New England League contest, and the Democrat of July 25th issues a consolatory "1st Epistle to the Portsmouthians" as follows:

"There were giants in those days, and the small clubs did band together to compete in friendly sports. There were the Doverians, Rochesterians, the Nashuans, the Haverhillerians, and the Portsmouthians, and for a time they amused people, aye, even the rulers. But the latter had more shekels and did not use justice to the others, and so in many contests did defeat them. They then got stiff-necked and went to conquer larger tribes than they, and did mix in with stronger tribes. They at first won a victory and their friends and neighbors were greatly puffed up, so much so that they did come out with sackbut and lute and did feed them on fatted kine, and even the best things of the earth were none too good for them. But lo and behold, they did pomp across the Worcesterians. Three times did they engage in battle and each time were they defeated. They fell on them, root and branch; they smote them hip and thigh; they destroyed their footmen and their horsemen; and even mopped up the diamond with them, until their own tribe hardly knew them any more and put them in the sack cloth and ashes. Now, hear ye, Portsmouthians, ye stiff-necked, puffed up and stubborn generation, hear ye the words of the prophet: As ye meted out to others so shall it be meted out to you; as you destroyed others by use of shekels of gold and shekels of silver so shall ye be destroyed, and in a twinkling of an eye your place shall know ye no more. CHILDREN'S DAY AT OLD ORCHARD.

Wednesday, Aug. 8th, is fixed for "Children's Day" at Ocean park, Old Orchard, Me. This has come to be the great day at Old Orchard, and the day when the people gather there in largest numbers. The officials of the Boston & Maine railroad say it is the biggest day they have on their entire system. This year the attractions will be greater than ever before. Among them will be the free use of public buildings and grounds, interesting exercises in the spacious temple, band concerts in the grove and on the beach, a genuine Rhode Island clambake, croquet, tennis and base ball games, sea-bathing, swings, flying horses, and brilliant illuminations and fire-works in the evening. Every child present will receive a beauliful embossed souvenir card .There will be large excursions from various points on the Boston & Maine and Maine Central railroads, with very low fares. There will be an excursion from this place, leaving at 7:45 A. M.; and returning, leaving Old Orchard at 5:00 P. M. Thus it will be seen that our people will have at least 7 1-2 hours at the beach, and at a very little expense.

The U. S. S. Ossipee is to sail to-day for Newport R. I.

Wallack's theater of New York has been sold to A. M. Palmer of the Madison Square theatre.

Blueberries since the recent rains have made an appearance in this market, brought mostly from York. They are sold quite cheaply.

The Sunday school of the Peirce Memorial church in Dover had a picnic at York beach on Wednesday, July 25th, and a most enjoyable time is reported.

The Misses Vennard and Miss Susan E. Gray, of Vaughan street, and Mrs. Ryder, wife of Dr. Edward S. Ryder, are at Camden, Me., for a few weeks.

Mr. Wilbur J. Rockwood, principal of the Jones grammar school, and wife, are at the Prospect house, Bethlehem. Miss Alice Marston and Miss Sadie Paul are also at the same hotel.

Want of Sleep

Is sending thousands annually to the insane asylum; and the doctors say this trouble is alarmingly on the increase. The usual remedies, while they may give temporary relief, are likely to do more harm than good. What is needed is an Alterative and Blood-purifier. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is incomparably the best. It corrects those disturbances in the circulation which cause sleeplessness, gives increased vitality, and restores the nervous system to a healthful condition.

Rev. T. G. A. Coté, agent of the Mass. Home Missionary Society, writes that his stomach was out of order, his sleep very often disturbed, and some impurity of the blood manifest; but that a perfect cure was obtained by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frederick W. Pratt, 424 Washington Street, Boston, writes. "My daughter was prostrated with nervous debility. Ayer's Sarsaparilla restored her to health."

William F. Bowker, Erie, Pa., was cured of nervousness and sleeplessness by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for about two months, during which time his weight increased over twenty pounds.

Secure from Harm

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence repaid in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieve cramps and pains, prevent indigestion, destroy disease germs in water drunk, restore the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, break up colds and fevers, and ward off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

Several travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often discussed their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

O. F. PHILBRICK & CO.,

COAL AND WOOD DEALERS,

I could jes' hear it: 'Gene,' says she, 'look after Bill a little an' cheer him up when I'm gone.' An' then she looked at the baby with her big eyes an' up at Bill, and tried to raise her hands, an' Bill saw what she wanted an' put one of her arms 'round the baby an' the other up 'round his own neck an' leaned over, an' I come away quick's I could an' went 'round to the mules an' tried to make b'lieve I was fixin' the harness or something. A mule is very cheerin' on such a 'casion. An' after a few minutes Bill come out with the baby still on his arm—the little feller never whimpered—an' he set down on the wagon tongue an' his head kinder dropped in his hand, an' says he: 'Gene, there ain't nobody to take care o' me 'n' the boy now?'

"We waited a while an' then I got a feller that came along to drive my outfit an' I took Bill's, an' he got in the wagon an' we went to Deadwood. The next day was Sunday an' we had a funeral. Ev'ry freighter that could be was there, an' lots of other folks that knowed Bill come down where we held it. I had a preacher, too; Bill was doubtful, but I told him it 'u'd be better. When he come Bill took him to one side, an' says he, 'I want to tell you 'fore you begin. You know who I am an' who she was—my wife—you've heard our story. Now I don't want you to preach no sermon, 'cause you might say something ag'in her when you didn't mean to an' it would be bad for you, an', of course, me, too; so jes' read a little out o' your Bible—I reckon that's all straight talk—an' if you must say something jes' say she was squar' an' never went back on Bill Jenks!'

"So that's about the way it was; the preacher read some an' then he sung a song I heard at church when I was a boy, an' some of us j'ined in a little, an' Big Smith whistled the tune kinder soft like, an' looked at the ground; an' then the preacher said that her that was gone must have been a good woman or the husband she left would not mourn her so much an' so deep, an' then he put on: 'She was always true to Bill Jenks,' an' that was all.

"We buried her down the gulch, a bit off from the trail in a little park 'mong some pines—Bill wouldn't have nothing to do with the reg'lar graveyards—he said folks might not want her there, an' they needn't have her. He dug the grave himself, so it would be right, he said. He sent clear to Omaha after a headstone an' it's a beauty—nicer 'n any they got in the buryin' ground.

"The baby, hey? You bet he's all right—the preacher's wife took him for a while an' then Bill got her an' her husband to go with him an' take the baby down to his folks in Iowa—all Bill's fam'ly down there are a good deal more on style an' all that sort o' thing than he is, an' they got lots o' money an' were tickled to death with the little cuss, an' are taking the best kind o' care of him an' when he gits big are goin' to send him to school, an' give him an edication an' a big start in life. The old folks wanted Bill to stay home too, but he said the life would kill him it was so reg'lar, so he's goin' down to see the little feller once a year. I wonder when he grows up an' gits wearin' fine clothes an' one thing 'n' another if he'll ever know anything 'bout the start he had way out here by the trail in the big freight wagon all covered with dust? Oh, 'nother thing, Bill named him William Queen Eugene Jenks—nothing ornery 'bout that name, is there?—Frederick H. Carruth in New York Tribune.

A PHYSIOLOGICAL QUESTION.

With More Knowledge of Physical Law, Life May Be Extended Indefinitely.

The food that man takes into his stomach ought to be of such quantity and quality as would exactly repair the losses which, through the action of the several organs, his body is to undergo. If it is excessive in either of these directions, or if it is deficient, disease of some kind will certainly be the result. If he knew enough to be able to adjust his daily food to the expected daily requirements of his system disease could never ensue through the exhaustion of any one of his vital organs.

Suppose, for instance, that a man rising in the morning should say to himself: 'Today I have to read ten pages of 'Blackstone's Commentaries,' twenty pages of 'Don Quixote,' to walk three miles and a half, to pay a visit of half an hour's duration to my grandmother and to take my sweetheart to the theatre, where I shall spend two hours; to do this I require (taking out his pencil and memorandum book as he speaks) so much carbon, so much nitrogen (giving, of course, the exact weight of these several elementary substances). I can get those precise quantities from eight ounces of bread, four ounces of eggs, eight ounces of beef, six ounces of potatoes, four ounces of fish, a half pint of beef soup, eight ounces of water and eight ounces of strong coffee to make them go a little further than they otherwise would.

Now suppose that he is exactly right in his calculations, and that the food taken is neither too great nor too little, but exactly compensates the anticipated losses, the death of each cell in the brain or the heart or the muscles, etc., will be followed by the birth of a new cell which will take its place and assume its functions. Gout, rheumatism, liver and kidney diseases, heart affections, softening and other destructive disorders of the brain, the various morbid conditions to which the digestive organs are subject, would be impossible except through the action of some external force, such as the swallowing of sulphuric acid or a blow on the head or a stab with a knife, which would come clearly within the class of accidents, and of course many of these would be avoidable.

Again, let us imagine that man knew just to what extent his animal appetites should be gratified, that he had ascertained definitely to what extent, if at all, alcohol and tobacco and other stimulants and sedatives should be used, that his knowledge in regard to clothing were perfect, that he had acquired complete information of the manner in which his house should be built and heated and ventilated and otherwise be made sanitarily perfect, that cookery had become one of the exact sciences, that he was able to avoid the effects of extreme heat and cold and moisture, that, in a word, he had nothing to learn in regard to the best way of living so as to preserve himself from all morbific causes—supposing all this (and I admit that it is not very likely that he will for ages upon ages acquire the almost God like omniscience necessary), death would be impossible and the eternal life to which we are told he was born would again be his.—Dr. William A. Hammond in Philadelphia Times.

Practical Socialism in Switzerland.

There is much more government in Switzerland than with us, and much less play of individuality. In small communes, for example, like Villeneuve, there are features of practical socialism, which have existed apparently from the earliest times. Certain things are held in common, as mountain pasturage and the forests, from which each family has a provision of fuel. These and other possessions of the commune are "confided to the public faith," and trespass is punished with signal severity.

The trees are felled under government inspection, and the woods are never cut off wholesale. When a tree is chopped down a tree is planted, and the floods that ravage Italy from the mountains denuded of their forests are unknown to the wiser Swiss. Throughout Switzerland the state insures against fire and inflicts penalties for neglect and carelessness from which fires may result. Education is compulsory, and there is a rigid military service, and a show of public force everywhere which is quite unknown to our unneighbored, easy going republic. —W. D. Howells in Harper's.

A Lightsome Heart.

I suffered for a long time from a severe, hacking cough, which was pronounced by a skillful physician to be dangerous and liable to terminate in consumption. I was completely cured by using Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.—Henry A. Bean, Lawrence, Mass.

Frank Gibson of Farmington has been granted a pension.

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called a "cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

William F. Gawing of Lebanon has been granted an increase of pension.

I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor!" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

PEACE AND LOVE.

Sweetheart, if Peace and Love were one,
How golden bright, from sun to sun,
The summer hours would come and go,
So darkened now with fear and woe—
If Peace and Love were one!

Ah! why, beneath the changing sky,
When Loves pursues, doth fair Peace fly,
And at the portal of the heart
When young Love knocks, doth Peace depart—
Beneath the changing sky?

Yet if we twixt the twain must choose,
If either Peace or Love must lose,
Shall we not cry, "Come, Love, with Pain,
Though never Peace return again!"—
If twixt the twain we choose?

Alas! not till Life sighs, "Adieu!"
Not till the red rose bloom is through,
Come Peace to lie upon Love's breast,
With roses white to crown his rest—
Not till Life sighs, "Adieu!"

—Katharine P. Williams in Harper's Weekly.

When They Leave Us.

The exodus of our bodily troubles is doubly welcome if their departure is unaccompanied by pain. It is the fault of the best of commendable cathartics, which act solely upon the bowels, that in operation they gripe and weaken these organs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters produce a laxative effect, but neither causes pain nor weaken the abdominal region or the stomach. This is pre-eminently the alterative which a constipated, billious or dyspeptic person should use, since a resort to it involves no bodily discomfort nor a violent reaction. The liver is aroused, the stomach benefitted, and the habit of body speedily and permanently improved by it. Fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles are among the maladies for which recorded experience has proved it to be efficacious. It is a wholesome appetizer, and a far more reliable tranquillizer of the nerves than stomach-disturbing narcotics and sedatives.

A delegation of about 100 persons from Illinois called on Gen. Harrison, at his home July 24th. He made them a speech, and then shook hands with every visitor.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. How Margarine Is Made.

Animal fat or grease is allowed to stand for some time at about 80 degs. Fahrenheit, when most of the stearine separates out; pressure removes the adherent oleine, and the stearine is then obtained in a solid concrete form. The oleine is next mixed with cotton seed oil, purified with fuller's earth, etc., arachis oil, nut oil, cocoanut oil, etc., at about 80 degs. Fahrenheit; the mixture is then churned with milk for some time, when it is allowed to flow in a gentle stream into ice cold water, where it permanently solidifies. It is then milled or ground, and this operation removes excess of milk and insures perfect blending; at the same time a small quantity of salt is added, when we obtain the finished article. The coloring matter and butter, if required, are blended in during this part of the operation. This is in principle the process of margarine manufacture. In separating stearine from oleine in animal fats the soft fats or greases are used in preference to the hard fats or tallow. Beef fat is always used, as being more palatable. The stearine is sometimes employed for candle or soap making; not infrequently it is mixed with other fats and passed off as lard; but this mixture would reveal an enormous proportion of stearine, by being harder and not so easily fusible as lard. To get over this, cotton oil is added to make the mixture more closely approach the nature and properties of lard.

A short time ago, when experimenting on margarine, Mr. T. Bruce Warren found, after removing a large quantity of cotton oil, that a quantity of cocoanut oil was present. He was completely surprised at this result, for the smell of cocoanut oil is so unmistakable. He found that cotton seed oil completely masks the smell and flavors of this oil. Many may ask why, above all others, should this have been selected for margarine? In the first place, being a concrete oil or fat, it is well adapted for such a purpose; provided its smell and flavor could be concealed. In the second place, it approaches more closely than any other vegetable or animal fat to the composition of genuine dairy butter.—Diet and Hygiene.

Life of a Priest in Russia.

Not only are the priests subjected to great hardships and privations, but they are the butt of all the wits and humorists of the empire. Half the jokes in the funny papers are about them, and their lives suggest half the proverbs of the country. "As poor as a priest," "As stupid as a priest," "As wretched as a priest," "As hungry as a priest," etc., are familiar expressions. Under the circumstances little better can be expected of them.

The influence of the priests over the people is very great. They are the representatives of the church, in which the peasant devoutly believes. They baptize his children, visit him when he is sick, marry him, bury him and say masses for the repose of his soul. He is with them always, like the poor, and if he is a man of any conscience or ability he cannot but wield an immense power. But, still further than this, the entire system of political, social and domestic economy in Russia is based upon the doctrine of autocracy. As the czar is the autocrat of all the Russias, as the bishop is the autocrat of his diocese, so is the priest the pope of the parish, the autocrat of the village in which he ministers. That is about all the satisfaction he gets.—William Eleroy Curtis.

War's Multiplied Dangers.

"You were in the war, then, Capt. McKillem?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am; yes, ma'am; fought all throught it."

"Is there not," she said, hesitatingly, "a great deal of danger in a battle?"

"Well, yes," the captain replied reflectively, "there is, there is. So many men standing around, you know, and so careless handling of firearms as is almost sure to occur during a battle, makes it really very unsafe."

Miss Lollipop shuddered, and then resumed:

"Are not some people severely injured at times?"

"Yes," the captain said, "they are. I once had a friend who was hurt so badly that he couldn't leave his room for several days."

And then she said there ought to be a law against them, and he said he believed the legislature of Iowa contemplated passing some such law at its next session.

And she said that she was glad.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Not Very Well Acquainted.

A certain public official, who will be immediately recognized when it is stated that he is a remarkably handsome gentleman, approaching middle age, and that he has brown eyes and a very full black beard just sufficiently sprinkled with gray to suggest pepper and salt, had a pleasant surprise party at his house on Valentine's day. It was tendered to the recipient by only one person, a young gentleman of extremely immature age, whose relationship to the middle aged gentleman in question is very close. The latter was greatly pleased. He had been for years longing for just such a surprise party. He kissed the new arrival with much fervor and led in his little daughter, aged 3 years, to join in the performance. The countenance of the new arrival was somewhat florid. The little lady looked at him and sized up her contract with many misgivings. Finally she said, timidly: "I don't want to kiss him, papa. He looks so hot, and I don't know him very well."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Blind Man and the Milk.

One blind from birth asked a man who could see: "What color is milk?" The man who could see replied: "The color of milk is like white paper." The blind man asked: "This color, then, rustles in the hands like paper?" The man who could see replied: "No; it is white, like white flour." The blind man asked: "Then it is soft and pliable, like flour, is it?" The man who could see replied: "No; it is simply white, like a rabbit." The blind man asked: "Then it is downy and soft, like a rabbit?" The man who could see replied: "No; white is a color exactly like snow." The blind man asked: "Then it is cold, like snow, is it?" And in spite of all the comparisons which the man who could see made still the blind man was wholly unable to comprehend what the color of milk really was.—The Long Exile.—Tolstoi.

QUIET RESTING PLACES.

Family Graves on an Old Farm — The Modern Cemetery.

Some of us, perhaps, may remember to have seen a cluster of many family graves in an uncultivated nook or dell of an old farm, where some of the less commercially valuable, but equally beautiful, original timber trees have been allowed to grow undisturbed, till their very size makes the few brownstone grave slabs seem modest and nestling to the ground, and where, the cattle having been kept out, the wood violet and other shy wild plants add their delicate charms, while they also mark the peaceful seclusion of the spot. Such simple and yet dignified rural furnishings are in harmony with the purpose to which the place is dedicated and to the feelings of the sympathetic visitor to it, and leave the imagination free to conjure up, if it will, romantic visions of the past. In such a spot the thought might easily occur to one that here was indeed a restful place in which to have laid away the mortal remains of a few of those weary human beings whose life struggle it was to subdue nature to their own aims, and who yet finally succumbed to her and whose remains became a part of her.

How much more appropriate to their lives are such graves, with such surroundings, than they would have been in some great cemetery, where their modest little gravestones would have been put to shame by scores of big, staringly white Egyptian obelisks, broken topped Greek columns, Roman urns, weeping Italian angels, Renaissance canopies, Gothic spires, and all the other kinds of showy monuments, and where all restlessness and seclusion are annihilated by rows upon rows and scattering swarms of factory made, white marble gravestones, all set up on edge so as to be as conspicuous as possible and looking as if they would be heaved out of plumb by every frost. Such stones have, in fact, the very unmonumental quality of being in a state of unstable equilibrium.

And as if all these white monuments and gravestones were not enough to frighten nature into submission, innumerable fences are added, mostly of the sort which may be described as the "this-is-the-most-show-you-can-get-for-your-money" cast iron fence. And, as iron rusts into a color which is somewhat harmonious with nature, such a catastrophe is carefully avoided by painting all ironwork a gloomy black, a vivid white, or by gilding it, like a cresting over a chromo tea store. The managers of cemeteries seem to be proud of these private fights with nature, and do all they can to aid and abet them with their ribbon gardening and by planting all the most artificial looking specimens of "nature's bright productions" that skillful nurserymen can induce to grow. They have no limiting rules as to showiness, but are only too glad to sell lots to those who will spend most in making a show that will advertise the cemetery.—J. C. Olmstead in Garden and Forest.

Calcutta and Its Associations.

Calcutta cannot fairly be classed among those places which attract one at first sight. The Hooghly river, upon which it stands, might more justly be called the Ugly river, and the city itself is merely a big, showy, flat, dusty, thoroughly modern town, which, being neither so ancient nor so conveniently situated as its two great rivals, Madras and Bombay, might well seem to have become the metropolis of India by mistake. But if there is not much romance in its outward appearance there is more than enough in the associations connected with it.

Not ten minutes' walk from this hotel in which I write lies beneath the shadow of the shining dome and jaunty pink columns of the new postoffice that fatal spot where 123 English prisoners died of suffocation in one night, cursing with their last breath the savage despot whose cruelty has handed down to remotest ages the terrible name of the Black Hole of Calcutta. In the very center of the bustling and populous business quarter once stood, if native tradition may be trusted, the gloomy temple of the demon who presides over secret murder, whence the future capital took its name of "Kali Kuttah" (Kali's shrine).—David Ker in New York Times.

Oldest Chime of Bells.

The oldest chime of bells in America is the chime of eight on Christ church, Salem street, Boston. They were brought from England in 1744, and were procured by subscription, Mr. John Rowe giving the freight. They cost £550; the charges for wheels and putting them in place were £93. The inscriptions on them are as follows: The tenor first says: "This peal of eight bells is the gift of a number of generous persons to Christ church in Boston, New England, Anno 1744, A. R." The second: "This church was founded in the year 1723, Timothy Cutler, doctor in divinity, the first rector, A. R. 1744." The third says: "We are the first ring of bells cast for the British empire in North America, A. R. 1744." The fourth exclaims: "God preserve the Church of England, 1744." The fifth commemorates "William Shirley, Esq., governor of Massachusetts bay in N. E., Anno 1744." The sixth bell tells us: "The subscription of these bells was begun by John Hammock and Robert Temple, church wardens, 1744." The seventh says: "Since generosity has opened our mouths, our tongues shall read aloud its praise, 1744," and the eighth concludes: "Abel Rudhall, of Gloucester, cast us all, Anno 1744."—Boston Herald.

Must Be Better Trained.

We need and must have greater physical endurance, stronger mental powers, better executive ability. In the good old time of slow communication, a clever man competed with but a few of his immediate neighbors, and easily rose their superior. Now he finds in any field he enters thousands who contend against him; he must, therefore, be better trained, and intellectually better armed than his father before him was, else, so far from making progress, he cannot even hold his own, but must be crowded out or trampled down in the fierce contest for supremacy.—Frances Fisher Wood.

It is good to put a bother away over night. It all straightens out in the morning.

OF NEW YORK.

Defenders of American Industry.

The great interests of an agricultural, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

An extensive domestic market for the surplus produce of the soil is of the first consequence. It is, of all things, that which most effectually conduces to a flourishing state of agriculture.—Alexander Hamilton.

Every manufacturer encouraged in our country makes part of a market for provisions within ourselves, and saves so much money to the country as must otherwise be exported to pay for the manufactures he supplies.—Benj. Franklin.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

"American wages for American workmen."—Republican motto.

The Great Reformer Won't Trouble Them.

Senator Wilson of Iowa submitted to the senate this week the majority report of the judiciary committee on the Jackson, Miss., election riots. The conclusions are that the whole colored vote of the place was suppressed through terrorism, although for years previous the negroes had voted without obstruction, and that certain United States officials who belonged to the white league and participated in the terrorism, are still permitted to hold their positions. District Attorney Harris, one of those implicated, was permitted to voluntarily resign, while Deputy United States Marshal Livingstone, Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue Wilson, and two mail clerks, still hold office under the reform administration unmolested, Byron Lemley, recently nominated for postmaster at Jackson, was treasurer of "the committee of One Hundred." A resolution is submitted with the report, calling President Cleveland's attention to these facts, and urging him to dismiss the offending officers. Much attention Reformer Cleveland will pay to that recommendation. "Pernicious activity" and "offensive partisanship" on the part of office holders mean voting the republican ticket—that's all.

OUR DAILY BREAD.

Heavy or sour biscuit has a vast influence through the digestive organs upon the measure of health we enjoy. How important to our present happiness and future usefulness the blessing of good health and a sound constitution are, we can only realize when we have lost them, and when it is too late to repair the damage. Notwithstanding these facts, thousands of persons daily jeopardize not only their health, but their lives, and the healths and lives of others, by using articles in the preparation of their food the purity and healthfulness of which they know nothing. Perhaps a few cents may have been saved, or it may have been more convenient to obtain the articles used, and the housekeeper takes the responsibility and possibly will never know the mischief that has been wrought. Paterfamilias may have spells of headache, the children may have lost their appetites, or look pale; if so, the true cause is rarely suspected. The weather, the lack of out-door air, or some other cause, is given, and the unwholesome, poisonous system of adulterated food goes on. Next to the flour, which should be made of good, sound wheat and not ground too fine, the yeast or baking powder, which furnishes the rising properties, is of the greatest importance, and of the two we prefer baking powder, and always use the Royal, and we thereby retain the original properties of the wheat, no fermentation taking place. The action of the Royal Baking Powder upon the dough is simply to swell it and form little cells through every part. These cells are filled with carbonic acid gas, which passes off during the process of baking.

The Royal is made from pure grape acid, and it is the action of this acid upon highly carbonized bicarbonate of soda that generates the gas alluded to; and these ingredients are so pure and so perfectly fitted, tested and adapted to each other, that the action is mild and permanent, and is continued during the whole time of baking, and no residue of poisonous ingredients remains to undermine the health, no heavy biscuits, no sour every article will be found sweet and wholesome.

Charles McCloud hanged himself with a scarf in his cell in the state prison at Concord on the afternoon of July 26th. He had been ill several days, and his sickness is supposed to have caused him to take his life. McCloud was twenty-nine years of age, and was committed last September under five years' sentence for burglary in Tilton.

The floors of an old building at Elm and White streets, New York, collapsed Wednesday afternoon July 26th, and about fifty girls employed by C. A. Lovell, bookbinder, were carried down into the cellar. Miss Maria Bagnell, aged twenty-two, was killed, and several others were badly injured.

We shall be much mistaken if the effect of this state communication [President Cleveland's message] will not be to strengthen considerably the case of free traders in all parts of the world. It will be regarded as a step in the right direction by all who believe in the soundness of free-trade principles.—London Post.

This much is certain, another fierce contest is impending in America over the principle at issue. If it terminates, as it may be hoped it will do, in the direction of a relaxing of those imposts that now so vexatiously hamper commercial intercourse between Great Britain and the United States, we may look to an impetus being given to our home trade that will go far to make up for the depression of late years.—Haddingtonshire (Eng.) Courier.

If once the United States finds herself on the road to free trade she will hardly know where to stop. For the principle which President Cleveland, as head of the democratic party, lays down is really that no import duties are justifiable which are not levied solely for purposes of revenue.—The Scotsman.

J. H. Wade, the richest man in Cleveland, a friend of Senator Payne, and after Payne the most prominent democrat in northern Ohio, has come out for Harrison and Morton and protection.

The postmasters of Dekalb county, Ill., have been assessed by the democratic county committee, the amount each postmaster is "requested" to give being distinctly stated.

What in the world has become of the red bandana which the democratic convention nominated for vice president some time ago, and which the party at large mislook for the presidential candidate?

The New York World says: "All signs point to the conclusion that the republicans are hard at work in some of the southern states, with hopes, too, of final success. There are several inviting fields there, Tennessee being among them."

A Creature of Cleanly Habits.

It is interesting to note in many places in this city a small machine, scarcely larger than a bandbox, in which electricity is at work for the purpose of keeping an adjacent room cooled by means of revolving fans. The electric motor is the most genteel, as well as the most business like of machines, a sort of steam engine in a dress suit. It is neat enough for the parlor, it savors of neither oil nor steam, and is as steady in its movements as my lady's Geneva watch. Its revolutions are of special interest to those who remember that these are but another form of light. The same energy that turns the motor will, if passed into a bit of carbon, create electric radiance.

The motor and the light are brothers, children of the same mother, yet possessed of diverse traits. The one is brilliant, the other busy; the one expends its energy in labor, the other in dispelling darkness. As a conveyor of power the motor is destined to find a welcome in the homes of the people. It is a creature of cleanly habits, pleasing appearance and correct principles. It will wave fans, run the sewing machine, turn the cream freezer, and perform other duties as yet not clearly defined. The electric motor will find its way to the home ere long.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The City of Siberia.

If I were asked to characterize Omsk in a few words, I should describe it as a city of 30,000 inhabitants, in which the largest building is a military academy and the most picturesque building a police station; in which there is neither a newspaper nor a public library, and in which one-half the population wears the Tsar's uniform and makes a business of governing the other half. The nature of the relations between the latter half and the former may be inferred from the fact that an intelligent and reputable citizen of this chinovnik dominated city, who had been kind and useful to us, said to me when he bade us good-by, "Mr. Kennan, if you find it necessary to speak of me by name in your book, please don't speak of me favorably."

"For heaven's sake, why not?" I inquired.

"Because," he replied, "I don't think your book will be altogether pleasing to the government; and if I am mentioned favorably in it, I shall be harried by the officials here more than I am now. My request may seem to you absurd, but it is the one favor I have to ask."—George Kennan in The Century.

Care of Our Bodies.

Few owners of fine horses do not spend from half an hour to an hour every day in grooming them with comb and brush. And they know this care helps to keep them in fine condition. Would not the same, or even a quarter of an hour spent daily in grooming, bathing and rubbing the body, the limbs, joints and skin be of equal benefit? There are men who spend from one to three hours every day doing this, and they find it prevents cold, rheumatism, sleeplessness and other physical maladies, promotes health and prolongs life. One man writes: "A few minutes given every morning bathing, rubbing and grooming the body is not a great sacrifice of valuable time. Twice so much is given graciously by many a thoughtful owner to the care of a horse whose value may be only a few hundred dollars, yet many persons exclaim that they have not time to spare for these hygienic attentions to themselves and

Our manufactures require the systematic and fostering care of the government. * * Equally important it is to provide at home a market for our raw materials.—James Monroe.

President Cleveland declines cautiously to dub himself a free trader, but he caters up a free trade position without disguise. —London Saturday Review.

Upon the success of our manufactures, the handmaid of agriculture and commerce, depends in a great measure the independence of our country, and none can feel more sensibly than I do the necessity of encouraging them.—Andrew Jackson.

Mr. Cleveland has taken his stand on free trade, * * and on that broad question Mr. Cleveland's candidature naturally and necessarily carries English sympathy.—London Globe.

When our manufactures are grown to a certain proportion, as they will under the fostering care of the government, * * the farmer will find a ready market for his surplus produce, and, what is of almost equal consequence, a certain and cheap supply for all his wants.—John C. Calhoun.

The president is careful to state that he frankly declares his indifference to the charge of favoring free trade. His policy, he says, may be called by that or another name, but it is the policy he recommends to Congress, and which, he does not affect to deny, must alter the terms on which foreigners have access to the American market.—London Saturday Review.

Congress have wisely, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.—George Washington.

Mr. Cleveland demands in effect that there shall be a tariff for revenue purposes only. No tinkering with the tariff will suffice; no readjustment of duties will do. The only reform that common sense can accept of is one which unaffectedly substitutes the principle of unimpeded imports for that of tariff regulations.—London Standard.

We must now place our manufactures by the side of the agriculturist. * * Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.—Thomas Jefferson.

With President Cleveland, Great Britain knows where she is.—Glasgow Herald.

THE WEATHER.

For New England to-day:—

Fair weather, stationary temperature, variable winds.

THE BIG SHOW.

The great "4-Paw and Wild West" circus has come and gone, and completely eclipsed any similar show given here. The street parade alone was a good entertainment, with its four bands, dens of animals, chariots, prairie schooner of antique build, Deadwood coach, round dozen of elephants, ponies, donkeys, noble red men and red women, equestrienness, cowboys, etc. The rain of the morning undoubtedly kept many country people out of the city, but still the streets were well lined with people during the passage of the procession, in which were nearly three hundred fine horses and over two hundred men.

In the tent, the promise of the advertisements was carried out. Dr. Carver, the champion wing-shot, gave a wonderful exhibition of marksmanship. The Blondin horse performed, and the pretty little pony Eclipse jumped from one swinging stage to another, through papered hoops and a ring of fire. The capture of the Deadwood coach by Indians and the rescue by cowboys, the chase and lynching of a horse thief, and Custer's last charge, were quite realistic enough to please most people. The performing dogs and goats, and elephants, including the boxer Sullivan; the Chinese laundrymen and Japanese performers; the riding, rope walking, athletic exercises, and the other features, were all first class, each in its way; and the trapeze exercise was away ahead of anything of the kind done here before. If the hippodome races were not real, they simulate reality to perfection; and it was worth "going to the circus" merely to look at thirty-one such beautiful horses in one team, as Adam Forepaugh, Jr., drove around the course at the close. The music under the canvas merits a word; it was the best we ever heard in a circus tent. The menagerie is large, fine and of course well kept; it is particularly strong in cats of all sorts, from lions and tigers down, in bears, and animals of the deer kind. We were glad not to see a single miserable old snake—we hate snakes; neither do we particularly admire the hippopotamus, which is as uncouth looking as his name. The bison we felt some regard for, on account of his race being almost extinct.

It is a big show.

BASE BALL.

The game between the Portsmouth and Salem clubs, at Salem on July 26th, was according to the press reports, "a comedy of errors," the heavy batting of both clubs being the only redeeming feature. Salem earned two runs and Portsmouth six, but the score at the end of the game was as follows:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Salem	5	1	0	0	0	0	9	0	0	5—15
Portsmouth	0	0	1	4	0	5	0	0	2	2—12

The Manchester-Portsmouth game which was to have been played in this city Friday afternoon was prevented by the rain.

The Boston Globe of July 27th says: "The Lynn contingent of the New England League has finally and irrevocably disbanded, and the team will be transferred to Boston immediately. The John P. Lovell Arms company of Boston, and A. J. Rosch, the owner of the Athletic franchise of Philadelphia, visited Lynn yesterday and negotiated for the transfer of the team. The league season will be played to the close. This move has, no doubt, prevented the disbandment of the entire New England League."

POLICE COURT.

Patrick Ryan, Thomas Gallagher, Richard Burke and Frank Burns, were each assessed $9.90, fine and costs, in the police court on Friday by Judge Buford.

House at auction to-day; see advertisement.

We call attention to the advertisement of Finzer's Old Honesty Plug Tobacco. It is made of the best of Burley tobaccos, sweetened with pure sugar and honey, and flavored with the choicest of licorice and other delicious ingredients. It is free from all foreign substances, and will make a pleasant and lasting chew. Such dealers who have not it in stock will do well to give it a place on their shelves, and those who are not using it are requested to give it a fair trial and be convinced of the superiority, good quality and reliability of Finzer's Old Honesty Plug Tobacco.

We learn that efforts are being made to suppress the indictment against the wealthy New York parties who cruelly abused their horses by driving them at full speed to the top of Mount Washington last summer. Col. Marvin procured an indictment against the offenders, and there his authority and that of the society of which he is state agent, ceases. The matter now rests with the attorney general, and it remains to been seen if rich men may violate the law and outrage humanity with impunity.

The republicans of Kittery had a flag-raising last Thursday evening, hanging out a Harrison and Morton banner twenty-seven feet long, from Trefethen's building to Hayes' store.

In the equity case in the United States circuit court of the A. F. Pike Manufacturing Co. against the Cleveland Stone Co., wherein the latter were sought to be enjoined from making and selling whetstones and scythe sharpeners with names affixed which had been selected by the A. F. Pike Co. as trade marks, Judge Colt granted an injunction as prayed for.

The commodore of the Mystic Veterans has detailed Capt. E. G. Adams to make all arrangements for the annual down-river trip of the association, and notify the members when it will take place, which will probably be sometime next week.

There are now about 300 guests at the Oceanic, Star island, Fishing is especially popular with the guests this year; all the boats are out every morning, and some very fine catches are made. Mr. George Riddle gave a reading in the music hall, July 26th. Hon. Wm. Flynt of Springfield, Mass., and Mr. T. J. Berry of Boston, are at the Oceanic. A large number of persons from Springfield, including David Taylor and family and Virgil Perkins and party, are at this house for the season.

We learn that Mr. Horace S. Hatch, office manager of the Western Union Telegraph Co. in this city, has resigned the position and will hereafter locate in Boston and be engaged in one of the company's offices in that city.

The Times now publishes a column or more of Dover news daily, and sends a big bundle of papers to that city by pony express, which makes the distance in just about an hour.

Mrs. Rogers, widow of Cyrus Rogers, was on Wednesday of this week taken to the Cottage Hospital for treatment.

Mr. Edward Chandler of Lynn, Mass., whose wife, a native of Portsmouth, was killed in Boston by one of the American Express Co.'s teams a short time since, has been paid $5,000 by that company.

Capt. Frank P. Coleman of Newington, master of the schooner James A. Gray, was in this city last Thursday, on his way to make a flying visit to his family. He left on Friday to rejoin his vessel at Boston, between which port and Saco she is constantly running.

Picnics are supplied at short notice by the boatmen of the river, with cunners and other small fish, all ready prepared for culinary operations. If parties are too lazy to catch them, they can be procured before sailing.

The police have stopped the boys from swimming in public places in this city, even where they are plunging overboard in bathing costumes. The juveniles think that cleanliness is next to godliness, and that the art of swimming is quite important in deep water, for the preservation of human life. Now after all the talk for several years of a public bathing place on the Piscataqua, where there are so many opportunities offered in the cool waters of the Atlantic, not a single step has yet been taken by the authorities or private parties to provide such a place. SPECTATOR.

The U. S. S. Ossippee left the navy yard shortly before ten o'clock Friday forenoon, bound for Newport, R. I.

The New York Sun says: "An abomination of desolation is frightening the summer resort proprietors, especially along the Jersey coast. Not this year, but in about one year more, at the present rate of decrease in patronage, they will be left alone with their houses and their sea views. About one half the average is said to the size of the crowd at Asbury Park and the adjacent resorts thus far this year, and the season is so far along now that there is little chance of its catching up with itself.".

Near Carn's mills, Crawford county, Indiana, on the night of July 24th, a band of White Caps took from their beds a Mrs. Wiseman and her nineteen-years-old daughter, tied them to a tree, and whipped them with hickory switches until they fainted. The White Caps then went to the house of Leslie Moreland, told what they had done, and ordered him to start out at daylight to spread the news, that being their custom. He refused, when they opened fire on him with revolvers, to which he and three relatives answered with rifles, shooting three White Caps, two fatally. The elder Wiseman woman was fatally beaten.

Roderick Lowry, a nephew of Gov. Lowry of Mississippi, savagely assaulted his wife at Jackson on July 23d, beating, biting and kicking her, and smashing a heavy water pitcher and quart bottle on her head and face. He then fled leaving her for dead.

On July 26th, near Bentonia, Miss., the daughter of Dolph Miles, colored, poisoned her father and three brothers. Two brothers died, and the third brother and the father are not expected to recover. The mother was at church, and thus missed her portion of the poison. Family trouble was the cause.

The Empress Victoria of Germany gave birth to a son at the royal palace at Potsdam on Friday morning.

Mrs. Cleveland is at Marion, Mass., with the Gilders. The prevarication of the various watering-place hotel men now ceases for this season. It will not be an object to advertise where the fair Frances is to go next year.

Jacob Overlook of Wilmington, Me., aged ninety-two, was found dead near his barn on Friday afternoon, July 20th. Paralysis was the probable cause of his sudden death.

Joseph Pulitzer of the New York World, now in Europe, is expected to return next month and join his family at Bar Harbor.

United States Marshal Harmon on July 24th arrested Martin Brann of Hallowell, Me., for procuring a fraudulent pension certificate.

Elbridge G. Young of Otter Creek, Me., committed suicide Thursday, July 24th, by shooting. Family trouble was the cause. He fastened his gun to a sewing machine.

Charles Richardson of West Bath, Me., a farmer aged seventy, dropped dead Tuesday forenoon, July 24th, while at work in the hay field.

It is alleged that President Cleveland has demanded the resignation of Pension Commissioner Black, but that Black refuses to resign.

The fighting between the Hatfield and McCoy factions in Pike county, Ky., has recommenced. One of the McCoys was killed and several wounded in a recent fight with officers.

Assessors' Notice.

THE Assessors of the City of Portsmouth will hold an adjourned meeting at the Aldermen's Room, Monday, July 30th, at 7:30 o'clock P. M., to consider applications for abatement of the tax of 1888.

BY ORDER OF THE CHAIRMAN.

Want of Sleep

Is sending thousands annually to the insane asylum; and the doctors say this trouble is alarmingly on the increase. The usual remedies, while they may give temporary relief, are likely to do more harm than good. What is needed is an Alterative and Blood-purifier. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is incomparably the best. It corrects those disturbances in the circulation which cause sleeplessness, gives increased vitality, and restores the nervous system to a healthful condition.

Rev. T. G. A. Coté, agent of the Mass. Home Missionary Society, writes that his stomach was out of order, his sleep very often disturbed, and some impurity of the blood manifest; but that a perfect cure was obtained by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frederick W. Pratt, 424 Washington street, Boston, writes: "My daughter was prostrated with nervous debility. Ayer's Sarsaparilla restored her to health."

William F. Bowker, Erie, Pa., was cured of nervousness and sleeplessness by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for about two months, during which time his weight increased over twenty pounds.

Secure from Harm

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER. And justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieve cramps and pains, prevent indigestion, destroy disease germs in water drunk, restore the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, break up colds and fevers, and ward off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

Neveral travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often dissuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work, however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

VENEZUELA'S GOLD MINES.

Auriferous Fields on the Banks of the Yuruari River—Scenes in Camp.

The climate is unhealthy, disposing persons to bilious fevers, and in the height of the rainy season the mortality is great among the negroes, who often sleep in the open air and take but little care of themselves. Chills and fever is a common complaint. Position in life has a great deal to do with the liability to sickness, as upon the quality of the living accommodations much depends. The fever seems to thoroughly weaken the blood of the sick, and for months after a sick man has left his bed he appears like a living corpse. Much of the disease contracted at the mines is no doubt due to excesses of various kinds, which seem to be inseparable from life in a mining country. When the greatest care is needed, in reference to every detail of eating, drinking, clothing and living, little is taken by the majority, and the result is that the various foreign employes, or officers as they are called—American, English and German—from the chief mining engineer down to the Irish blacksmiths, are continually sick or recovering from sickness.

I have seen over half the "officers" of one company sick, thus necessitating double work from the others, conducing to similar sickness. Doctors are plentiful, but they, too, are often laid up. At night a dense mist from the river covers the whole valley like a pall. No wonder there are fevers.

The ore from the mines, after being crushed, passes under the stamp heads, on to which a stream of water is flowing, and then crushed into fine powder from the battery over the amalgamation tables. These are of copper, covered with a coating of mercury. The gold particles amalgamate with the mercury, and the water carries the quartz grains on into the race below. The tables are cleaned every twenty-four hours, the mill being stopped to allow of this. The result from the day's working of this immense machinery is a couple of balls of varying size—say of an egg—of amalgam, which are carried down to the house, weighed and then deposited in the safe until a sufficient quantity is had for retorting. After retorting the resultant gold is ready for shipment. Some gold is shipped in the retorted form and some is melted and cast in the form of bars before shipment. The shipment of bullion takes place once a month, the various companies bringing their gold to the office whence the bullion train starts. The bullion is carried over the road in charge of a mounted party of guards well armed.

Bullion day is sort of a holiday for the chief officers of the companies, on which they all meet together and discuss mutual affairs. The bullion train in returning brings up a mail and the money to pay the labor and other expenses. Then, for many days, the scene at a company's office is a lively one, the miners besieging the windows for letters and with inquiries as to when pay day will come. The money comes up generally in English sovereigns, with occasionally some American gold. There is very little change in the country, and ten or five cent Venezuelan pieces are rare. English, French, German and American money is that chiefly in circulation. The standard of Venezuelan currency is a 100 cents, or sencillo dollar, worth about what our dollar is, but accounts in Venezuela are kept in Macuquino. A Macuquino dollar is worth about four-fifths of the sencillo dollar, or to be exact, 74.76 cents American gold. A five cent piece is a ten cent piece cut in two, and divided again it passes for two and one-half cents.

An event in life at a mine is the arrival of a freight train of bullock carts or burros. The Venezuelan in charge, after much fumbling, finds the bill of lading, and then comes the checking of the packages while all the idlers look on. Sometimes it is a cargo of boxes containing tins of green corn, tomatoes, oysters, lobsters, preserved fruits, etc., from the states. Then it is bulky machinery, stamp heads, flasks of mercury, dynamite or fuse. The smaller mining stores, such as dynamite, fuse, shovels, picks, machetes, hammers, drill iron, rope, etc., are kept in a store room in the living house of a mining company.

Let me describe a sleeping apartment at the mines, as it will give an idea of the manner of living. The floor is covered where the iron bed stood with matting, under which are some coffee sacks. The hammock, thrown up over the mosquito frame of the bed, is stretched across the room. The carrata roof, in which are numerous spiders and a friendly house snake, who occasionally comes down on the floor, is the ceiling. An immense toad, who is of use, as he catches many insects, lives under the bed, and is on good terms with a small dog of the country who sleeps in the room. The windows, without glass, are simply protected by rough Venetian shutters, and when it rains a steady stream pours in several places through the roof. The disagreeable insects known as chigoes are numerous, and great care has to be taken to avoid their acquaintance. The temperature at the mines is quite high during the day, but as the nights are cool, warm bed coverings are indispensable.

All over the country are scattered barrancos, or small shafts, sunk on to the different lodes, some abandoned and some still worked. These are dangerously near the roads in many cases, and great care has to be taken in riding about after dark. The best way is to let the reins lay loosely on the mule's neck and trust to his sagacity. The river water is used by many for washing, and that of the mines, well filtered, is often drunk, being kept cool in tenagas. These are porous earthenware jars, which are known curiously as "monkeys" in the West Indies.—New York Herald.

Method of Preserving Fruit.

Professor Tyndal has shown that atmospheric germs do not pass through a layer of cotton wool, and the discovery has been applied to keep preserved fruit by covering the jar holding it with cotton batting. The germs of putrefaction in the fruit are said to be rendered harmless by cooking, and the cotton batting keeps out those of the air.—Public Opinion.

A Pioneer's Family Basket.

It was early in March, long years ago, when one of the pioneer settlers of Oxford county made up his mind to move his family from Massachusetts to that favorite region. He had seven little ones and feared they could not endure so long a journey and the piercing cold. How do you think he took care of them? The father obtained from a neighbor a great basket, twelve feet by six, and four feet high. It was fitted on an ox sled and was made for the purpose of transporting grass seed. The seven little ones were packed in straw in this basket, like so many kittens or pigs, and made the journey safe and warm. The basket is yet preserved by the pioneer's descendants.—Lewiston Journal.

Swine's Flesh as a Food.

The prohibition once offered, that the mosaic prohibition of certain animals, especially the hog, as food, was founded in profound hygienic wisdom, is not now considered satisfactory. Pork in good condition is recognized to be as healthful food as other meats in the same condition throughout the world, and it is now eaten with the same immunity in Syria as in Ohio. The modern Israelites offer most interesting notes to the ethnologist by their continued preservation, in the midst of a high civilization, of the religious taboo of savagery. This rite has had paramount influence beyond that of their written doctrines, in their segregation from the nations in which they have sojourned; and, now that it is becoming less strictly observed, there are evidences of their ceasing to be a peculiar people.—Science.

I suffered for a long time from a severe, hacking cough, which was pronounced by a skillful physician to be dangerous and liable to terminate in consumption. I was completely cured by using Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.—Henry A. Bean, Lawrence, Mass.

A French electrician says he will soon be able to produce a thunder storm whenever demanded, and in the district desired. But the man who will be able to keep away the storms on the days when the Sunday school and other picnics are arranged for, will receive the most cordial commendation.

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called a "cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

Governor Ross of Texas has issued a proclamation, establishing a quarantine against the yellow-fever-infected districts of Florida. Steps had been taken already to guard against infection threatened fugitives from Florida.

Ladies Who Bloat.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous bo your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood; he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

Why They Leave the City.

To see the world, its great features, its natural scenery, is a fine and good desire—is an enlarging and ennobling experience; to enjoy the rolling of the creamy-crested waves on the azure field of the sea, the spread of changing color on the mountain sides, the sweep of leagues on leagues of prairie, the depth and depth of forests, is all enriching to the soul, and sometimes refreshing to the body.

But it is not in this noble rage that the host of travelers leave the city; it is for the sake of gayety, in order to wear new clothes and see those of others, to tell of it, and because others do it. To some, of course, the need of a vacation is vital; a week more of the same scenes, the old places, the old faces, is destructive to the nerves, and change of air is indispensable to continued existence. Of these we are not speaking. Let them go, and speed their going; it is the necessity of life that impels them. But the great majority of people, who go with no such need or motive, would perhaps, in the middle of their gayest season at sea side, spring, or mountain, gladly exchange cells with those who consider themselves city bound prisoners.—Harper's Bazar.

Inventions Patented by Women.

That women can invent and can patent their inventions is shown by a review of the patents issued to them. That three women should have patented three kinds of corsets, and four more should have devised four new kinds of bustles, and that one should have hit upon a combined corset and bustle, is not very astonishing. The wonder is, rather, that men should have, during the same period, devised five or six times as many new kinds of each article. It is not even unexpected when one finds that one woman has patented a new and useful plumber's trap to prevent sewer gas from escaping into a house from a washbowl. But when it is found, as the fact is, that one woman has patented a successful hay press, and another a machine for making barrels, the right for which has been purchased by a great barrel making corporation, it becomes apparent that woman's intellect can grasp intricate mechanical movements, and combine them for the benefit of the race.—New York Sun.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. A QUESTION OF HEALTH.

Bread, biscuit and cake, now generally made by the aid of baking powder, enter so largely into our daily food that their debasement by the introduction of any injurious or deteriorating substance is a matter of serious concern to the public health. What baking powder shall we use to avoid the lime and alum now found in so many leavening agents, and to insure pure, sweet and wholesome bread, is a question, therefore, of direct importance to every individual.

The "Royal" has been determined by the Government chemists and the most prominent food analysts to be the only baking powder made that is entirely free from lime, alum and other impurities, and absolutely pure. It is made from cream of tartar refined for its exclusive use by patent processes by which the tartrate of lime is totally eliminated. No other baking powder manufacturer uses chemically pure cream of tartar, and hence the adulteration of other brands. The "Royal" is, accordingly, the only baking powder that will produce perfectly pure bread, biscuit, cake, pastry, etc.; and these articles are now pronounced more wholesome when raised by the Royal Baking Powder than when leavened by any other agent.

It is particularly a question of health, therefore, what baking powder we shall use; and those who appreciate the miseries of dyspepsia and other ailments that follow the use of impure food will not hesitate to select the "Royal."

THE FAMILY OF DOSERS.

Growth of a Pernicious Habit—Enriching Patent Medicine Proprietors.

"Drink it; it can't hurt you."

Unless you happen to be a person with a strong will of your own, this injunction, with its accompanying assurance, is likely to do the business, and you straightway take the first step in the broad avenue which leads to the great and ever growing community of dosers. It is probable that Americans are greater sufferers from the dosing habit than the people of any nation on the footstool, and it would be difficult to say what nostrum they would not grasp at and greedily gulp down, provided it were put up in an attractive form, with a name—no matter what—blown in the bottle.

And there is good reason for this predilection for patent proprietary potions. In the first place, a bottle of medicine, although claiming to be a specific for but one disease or one class of disorders, is shown also to be a radical cure, or helpful, or at the least innocuous in any or all other forms of bodily derangements; and as this fact is testified to, not only by the dealers, who of course have no interest in deceiving the public, but by an endless array of unsolicited testimonials from clergymen, who, it would seem, indulge in this variety of literature as a recreation from excessive labor in the soul saving department of industry; from actors, actresses, singers and other show people, who therefrom receive incidental notoriety; from respectable druggists, whose position of middlemen is merely an adventitious circumstance and not to be urged against their known disinterested conduct outside of business and after business hours; and, generally, from unknown and unknowable persons whose last and usual place of abode is the greatest possible distance from the city or town in which you happen to live.

Then the inducements for a copious libation are generous to a fault, but this is not the fault of the proprietor. Quite the contrary. While the temperate doser is forced to pay $1 lawful money for each and every bottle of the syrup, elixir, bitters or whatever appellation the medicine affects, the regular and approved doser is offered special terms—$5 for six bottles—so that, beside being given an opportunity to indulge his dosing propensities to the full, he has the satisfaction of knowing that the more of the stuff he devours the more money he is saving, and, conversely, the more saving he is, the greater the opportunity for dosing which is vouchsafed him. Thus, by one stroke, he is building up both his fortunes and his health.

And then it is so handy to have in the house! Could anything be more convenient than to have in one's cupboard the wherewith to cure rheumatism, coughs, colds, neuralgia, chilblains, cancer, ringworm, consumption, corns and kidney complaints, when that wherewithal is comprised within the convenient compass of one quart bottle (five to the gallon), and especially when, as if by special providence, it usually happens that symptoms of all the diseases named are ever present within the house which has that puissant bottle in its cupboard?

There are, to be sure, incredulous persons who hold that this perpetual dosing does no good; but these doubters should consult a few of the consumers of the patent medicines, and hear said consumers' testimony as to how much better they feel during the dosing period, which generally lasts the year round, and how depressed they feel when they abstain for a day or two. The doubters should also examine the bank accounts of the manufacturers and dealers in proprietary specifics, and the rooms of their spacious and beautifully adorned houses and their extensive grounds. If they shall then assert that patent medicines do no good, they are doubting Thomases indeed, and it were idle to further discuss the matter with them.—Boston Transcript.

Various Modes of Suicide.

"Of modes of suicide, poisoning is by far the favorite," said Dr. Hamilton. "I looked the subject up between 1866 and 1872, and found that of over 600 suicides here in those years 212 were suicides by poisoning. The preference in poisons was for arsenic, and this in its commonest form, paris green. Women almost always poison themselves, uneducated women using paris green, and educated women chloral or morphine. The frequency with which paris green is used is due simply to the easiness with which it can be obtained. The laws governing the sale of the different kinds of poison are not half stringent enough.

"In London hanging is the popular form of suicide, though voluntary starvation used to be. In France people drown themselves or die from suffocation by inhaling charcoal fumes. It is a singular fact that of the people who shoot themselves 75 per cent. shoot themselves in the mouth. At least this was the case at the time I gathered facts about the matter. Suiciding by jumping from a great height is a horrible way of killing one's self, but it is often done. And I am inclined to think that many cases of this character which are set down as such are not intentional suicides, but instances in which the morbid tendency which nearly every one feels when at a great height to throw one's self down, has overpowered the will and the brain. I myself once had a terrible experience of this character when ascending the mountain Corcovado, in the harbor of Rio Janeiro. It was with difficulty that I overcame a fearful restlessness and impulse to throw myself down into the blue sea, 2,000 feet below me. A fellow physician once told me that he had a patient who never dared to sleep on the third or fourth floor of a house because of his fear of yielding to an irresistible impulse to throw himself out of the window."—New York Sun.

A Russian Prison Kitchen.

We went to the kitchen, where the dinner was being got ready. The smell of the soup was fragrant and appetizing. Great bowls of boiled buckwheat stood ready to be served, and the reservoir of soup was piping hot. I tasted both. Buckwheat is an acquired taste, but the soup was capital. It is served out in wooden bowls, each containing a portion for five, who sit round the bowl with wooden spoons, helping themselves. In the bakery we found the great loaves of rye bread all hot from the oven. In appearance rye bread is like a dull ginger bread, but in taste it has an acidity not pleasing to the unaccustomed palate. The Russians all eat it when at large, and the prison bread is quite as good as that you get in private houses. I asked about the dietary scale. I was assured by Mr. Saloman and the governor that no restriction is placed upon the amount of food prisoners may consume. They had as much bread as they cared to eat at breakfast, at dinner, and at supper. As a rule, the daily consumption of bread did not exceed two pounds per man. There was no skilly. Quass, a kind of thin beer, was supplied them, and this again without limit as to quantity. Of the soup each man could have as much as he pleased; also buckwheat.

The only article which was weighed out was meat. Every man received a quarter of a pound of meat a day. They do not weigh their prisoners in Russia on entering and leaving the jail. That is a practice which they might introduce with advantage. There is no argument so crushing to the assailants of the cruelty of prison treatment as the evidence of avoirdupois—the statistics of the increase of weight which has accompanied the alleged privation and torture. And as they do not weigh their prisoners neither do they photograph them; neither do they take impressions of their thumbs, as is done in some French prisons. In this direction something remains to be done.—Pall Mall Gazette.

TRADE S.S.S. MARK

An Important Announcement

About six weeks ago, while at business, I was suddenly attacked with excruciating pains in my feet, knees and hands. So severe the attack that I took my bed immediately, and in two or three days my joints were swollen to almost double their natural size, and sleep was driven from me. After suffering the most excruciating pain for a week, using liniments and various other remedies, a friend who sympathized with my helpless condition, said to me:

"Why don't you get Swift's Specific and use it. I will guarantee a cure, and if it does not do the medicine shall cost you nothing."

I at once secured the S. S. S., and after using it the first day, had a quiet night and refreshing sleep. In a week I felt greatly benefitted. In three weeks I could sit up and walk about the room, and after using six bottles I was out and able to go to business. Since then I have been regularly at my post of duty, and stand on my feet from nine to ten hours a day, and am entirely free from pain. These are the plain and simple facts in my case, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries relative thereto, either in person or by mail. THOMAS MARSHLLE,

A Snake Charmer Falls a Victim.

India has just lost a snake charmer, one Kondajee Muboojee, who fell a martyr to his belief in his own powers. A lad 6 years old, named Vittoo Heorree, was bitten by a cobra at Mazagon, Bombay, and, as usual, a snake charmer was at once sent for. Kondajee arrived at the spot in half an hour, but the boy was already dead. The snake charmer inquired where the cobra had taken refuge, and, on a woodpile being pointed out, he removed the wood, found and seized the snake, and endeavored to make it bite the dead boy, declaring that if it did so the child would at once be restored to life. For two hours he persevered, but the snake refused to strike the body, and at last, irritated beyond endurance, turned and bit Kondajee in the hand. The snake charmer calmly placed the snake in a copper vessel and then sat down. A vehicle was sent for and the man placed inside, but by the time he reached home he was dead.

The story testifies strongly to the belief of the snake charmers of India in their power over the snakes, and in the existence of a superstition that the second bite of a snake will restore the life that the first has taken away. The apathy of the Hindoo is evident by the fact that the snake charmer used no effort whatever to save his own life. Whether he thought that he was proof against its ill effects was not stated in the evidence given at the inquest held on the body of the child, but it is clear that he had no belief in the virtues of any antidote or mode of treatment. It is most probable that he was confident in the power of the drugs, ointments, or charms he had previously used to protect him, or the evidence of the spectator showed that upon finding the snake in the woodpile he had seized it without the slightest hesitation. It is certainly singular that a man accustomed to handle snakes should have been so convinced that their bite had power to restore life as well as to cause death.—Foreign Letter.

The Arabs in Central Africa.

The havoc of Arab traders in Central Africa is vividly illustrated by the fact that one of the tribes Bishop Taylor intended to reach when he started his missions three or four years ago was wiped out of existence some time before the bishop's missionaries finally arrived at the borders of the desired country. The bishop was attracted to this region by Lieut. Wissmann's description of the big city of the Benîki, where Dr. Pogge and he traveled for miles along one street. Camping at the further end of the town, they were visited by about five thousand of the inhabitants, whom the travelers described as a gentle, cheerful and industrious people. About the time Dr. Summers, of the Taylor missions, reached the adjoining Tushilange country, Lieut. Wissmann again visited the Benîki region, where all was silent in the big town, the huts in ruins and the street overgrown with tall grass. The Arabs from Nyangwe had swooped down upon the peaceful spot and had killed, captured or dispersed the inhabitants.

How to put an end to the terrible outrages of the Arabs in Central Africa is a problem that is beginning to give serious concern to all the promoters of white enterprises in Africa.—New York Sun.

Some Hints Concerning Exercise.

It is a positive advantage in the amount of work accomplished if we turn aside to rest after meals. But by rest I do not mean doing nothing except digest, but digestion is advantaged by light exercise. Exercise for this purpose should be of a sort that gives pleasure, and is not a task. Exercise that gives no thrill of delight is at least defective, if not radically wrong. To walk a mile as a duty is nearly valueless. To ramble in pleasant woods for an hour, as a botanist, exercises the nerves rather than the muscles, and is of vast value. What, then, is our physiology of study in relation to digestion? (1) Do not touch any sort of literary work, a book, pen, or even newspaper, for two hours after eating. For the same reason you should not lecture, sing, or preach under the same conditions. (2) Work your brain with impunity for several hours after such rest. (3) Such rest should not be absolute indolence, but light exercise, and pleasurable. (4) Do not go from study to the table directly. There should be a brief reaction before dining.—M. Maurice, M. D., in Globe-Democrat.

Emperor Nero's Canal.

Among the most important public works in Greece is the canal through the Isthmus of Corinth, of which Gen. Türr is the De Lesseps. It was begun in 1883, and was to be completed this year, 1888, but it will not be finished for several years yet. It has the same breadth and depth as the Suez canal, and is about four miles long. The deepest cut is 250 feet. It passes through solid rock, and its sides are as yet left almost vertical. It is to be lighted by electricity. The cost was estimated at $7,000,000. This canal will save vessels from Trieste or Brindisi to Athens or Constantinople about 200 miles; it will save ships from Gibraltar about seventy-five miles. It has been dug largely by Italians, Turks and Montenegrins. Few Greeks have been employed; they do not take kindly to such work. The canal carries out a plan that was cherished by many of the ancients; it actually follows the course which was surveyed by order of the Emperor Nero. —Thomas D. Seymour in Scribner's.

The Salon's Prize Picture.

The grand prize has been carried off by M. Detaille, who painted for this salon a big picture which he named "The Dream." It is a clever painting, but not a masterpiece, and it mixes up realism and dreamland. We are shown a camp of soldiers, or rather soldiers wrapped up in their rugs and asleep on a moor, or, at any rate, what seems in the moonlight a wide plain. The arms are stacked and flags are stretched from stack to stack. Sentinels pace up and down. Far off the military incendiary has been at work, and the moonbeams struggle through a lowering sky. One must stand at some distance to see the dream, which appears in clouds that take the form of a triumphant army of the great Napoleon. The standards which waved at Fleurus, Marengo and Austerlitz are borne by the spectral host—so spectral that at any moment it may be dispersed by a sunbeam.—Paris Cor. Argonaut.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

The U. S. S. Ossipee, Comdr. Hoff, which left the navy yard last Friday morning, as was reported for Newport, R. I., came to anchor in the lower harbor, under orders received from Rear Admiral Stephen B. Luce, commanding the North Atlantic squadron, to remain until Wednesday, August 1st. The reason for the order is not stated.

Owing to an attack of the complaint known in financial circles as "shorts," all the workmen employed in the department of construction at this navy yard were on Saturday sent home at noon, to remain off until Tuesday morning, when they will report in order to "save their muster."

BASE BALL.

The following, of interest to base ball circles in this city just now, was in the Boston papers of Saturday morning: "The negotiations which have been pending between the John P. Lovell Arms company and the management of the disbanded Lynn club for the transfer of that club to Boston have fallen through. The Lynn management gave Mr. Lovell one day to consider the matter, it is said, and in the meantime disposed of captain and second baseman Sam Larocque to the Detroits, and also centerfielder Black. Mr. Lovell did not care to take the remnant of the club for the price named."

McCaffery, the short stop of the Portsmouth club, has been released at his own request. An affection of the eyes, with a fear of permanent injury, has made it necessary for him to give up ball playing for the season, which he has done under the advice of a physician. He is a brilliant player, and by his gentlemanly bearing on and off the ball field has made many friends in this city.

The Lynn club of the New England league played their last game Saturday, with the High Rocks, the local champions of Lynn. The score was six to six when game was called at the end of the fifth inning.

The Dover clerks will play the Portsmouth clerks on the South street grounds next Friday afternoon, at three o'clock.

The disbandment of the Lynn club while at the head of the New England league shows that something more than playing good ball and winning games is essential to success.

Coroner Edwin C. Nealley of Kittery, in the case of Peter Morris, the employe of Forepaugh's circus killed at Eliot on the morning of July 19th by striking an overhead bridge and being thrown under the cars, has exonerated the circus company and the railroad from all blame. The deceased was a blacksmith with the show, and had no business on top of the car.

Lawyer George F. Haley of Biddeford is pushing a case against the new horse railroad of that city. After causing the arrest of a driver for alleged overloading of his car on Sunday, July 15th, and prosecuting the trial, which resulted in the acquittal of the driver, Haley has brought action for perjury against Conductor Manning. At the trial the conductor testified that there were forty-eight people on the car when the arrest was made. Lawyer Haley produced a witness who said he counted sixty-five.

Like the Light Weights

Of the professional pugilistic, the kidneys are small but active in a state of health. Their secretion contains impurities productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy, if allowed to remain. When they are inactive, the blood becomes choked with animal debris capable of destroying life. To promote their activity when sluggish with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is not only to guard against the diseases mentioned, but to prevent the fatty degeneration and ultimate destruction of the organs by those exceedingly dangerous maladies—Bright's disease and diabetes. Activity of the bladder also insures it against the formation of gravel, which it sometimes requires one of the most dangerous and painful operations in surgery to remove. Gravel, moreover, is a most agonizing complaint. The Bitters further compound themselves by remedying constipation, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and nervousness, and nullify influences productive of malarial disease.

The steamer Copeland has been wrecked off the island of Stroma. She had 200 emigrants on board, all of whom were safely landed.

The remedy which most successfully combats malarial disorders, is Ayer's Ague Cure. It is a purely vegetable compound, and contains neither quinine nor any other dangerous ingredient. Warranted to cure chills and fever.

Queen Victoria took prizes for Short horn and Hereford cattle at the Royal Counties show recently.

Dandruff eradicated, the scalp made clean, and gray hair restored to its original youthful beauty and vigor by the use of Ayer's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Vigor.

Peculiar

Many peculiar points make Hood's Sarsaparilla superior to all other medicines. Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's. Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is now more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time, and retained its popularity and confidence among all classes of people so steadfastly. Do not be induced to buy other preparations, but be sure to get the Peculiar Medicine,

"MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT."

The arguments in the insurance cases which were tried before Judge Allen last week will be made in this city this morning by Messrs. Frink for the companies and General Marston for the plaintiff. Judge Allen, who passed Sunday at York beach in listening to what the wild waves were saying after the long easterly blows, will come here in the early train prepared to listen to the dry oratory of the lawyers after his rest at the sea shore.

"BEARDING THE LION," ETC.

A man who refused to give his name was arrested by City Marshal Rowe on the circus ground Friday afternoon, it is alleged as he was attempting to pick the pocket of Deputy Sheriff Holt of a pair of handcuffs and a lot of deputy sheriff 's business cards! He was taken before Judge Bufford on Saturday, and held in $500 for the October term of the supreme court, being tried as "John Jones," which certainly is not is name. There was quite a circus over the attempt to get the fellow's photograph taken, he being too "fly" to allow it; a picture was taken, but it was a sort of composite affair unlike anything in the heavens above, the earth beneath or the waters under the earth, or any other place, and he never can be recognized from that "likeness." He is a big fellow, over six feet high and weighing 200 pounds, and will probably turn out to be "wanted" in other places before the October term of court begins.

YACHT RACE.

A yacht race from Cape Ann to the Isles of Shoals and back, open to all boats between sixteen and thirty feet on the water line, will be sailed on Saturday, Aug. 4th, under the rules of the New England Yacht Racing association. The Black Cloud, Mignon, Trudette, Kerlinda, Siva and other crack boats among the small craft, have entered for the race, which is expected to be the most noted event of the season in eastern waters. The course will be from a line off Gloucester to the whistling buoy off Newburyport, thence to and around White island, and back to the starting point, a distance of about thirty miles. The winning boat will take sixty per cent of the prize money, the second twenty-five per cent, and the third fifteen per cent.

HAMPTON'S ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

Messrs. Charles M. Lamprey, (chairman,) John A. Ross and Charles Philbrick of Hampton, committee on invitations for the approaching celebration of the anniversary of the settlement of that town, have issued a circular as follows:

The two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the town of Hampton, N. H., will be celebrated on Wednesday, the fifteenth day of August, 1888, by its citizens, and the descendents of Hampton's sons and daughters from near and far, with appropriate ceremonies.

A procession will form in the morning; an oration will be given by Hon. John J. Bell, at eleven o'clock A. M., followed by a public dinner, with speeches from distinguished guests, including Ex-Governor Charles M. Bell, General Gilman Marston, and Ex-Senator J. W. Patterson; there will be a promenade concert and fireworks in the evening.

The citizens of this ancient town invite all past residents, and especially descendents of its early settlers and its former inhabitants, to join with them in the celebration. Persons desiring tickets for the dinner please notify the committee on invitations before the tenth of August. As a great company of visitors is expected on this occasion, those who wish to remain over the night are requested to communicate at an early date with the chairman of the committee on invitations, so that proper accommodations may be secured.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Charles Rolfe, of the Boston Globe force, paid us a call on Saturday afternoon, on his way back to resume work on the treadmill after his summer vacation. He has been on a trip to the British provinces, going from Boston to St. John, N. B., by steamer, and returning part of the way by the same means of transportation. He came in on Saturday from White Island, Isles of Shoals, with Capt. David R. Grogan, keeper of the light-station, whose guests Mr. Rolfe's daughter and son have been for several weeks, and are still.

Mr. Richard I. Walden arrived home on Saturday night from a two-weeks trip in the schooner Agnes E. Downs, Capt. Levi Downs. Mr. Walden left the schooner at Newport, R. I., where she was in company with about 120 other mackerel seiners, and came home by rail. The mackerel fishery is a practical failure so far this season, for though the fish are plenty, they do not school.

Mrs. Benjamin of Grand Rapids, Michigan, is visiting her mother, Mrs. A. J. Fitts, on Maplewood avenue.

Mrs. Richard B. Beaumont of Brooklyn, N. Y., is visiting her parents, Mr. B. Whitcomb and wife of Fleet street.

The Dover Democrat of July 27th says: "Mr. Oliver P. Haynes, formerly leader of the Portsmouth drum corps, but now a compositor in this office, leaves on an extended tour next week, going to the Adirondacks and Catskills."

Mrs. S. R. Hamilton of Northwest street is visiting friends in Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Edward Weeks of Chelsea, Mass., and Mrs. Frank Harding, son and daughter, of the same place, are visiting Mrs. Edward Weeks of High street, this city.

Capt. Nathaniel S. Patten of Tarpon Springs, Florida, is passing a short time in visiting his sisters, Mrs. Albert Rand and Mrs. John H. Cheever of this city.

Mr. W. A. Nowell, of Milwaukee, Wis., a native of this city and a republican all through, is secretary of the republican state central committee of Wisconsin during the present campaign.

Dr. Wm. Shea of Philadelphia is passing a few weeks at the residence of Charles H. Mendum, Esq., on Middle street.

Assistant Marshal Peverly arrived home last Friday evening from a vacation trip to Prince Edward island. He reports the weather so cool all the time he was there that it was uncomfortable to move about out of doors without a heavy coat on, and that all the towns have a fifty-years-ago sort of look, and are managed the same as they look.

At Rutland, Vt., July 26th, Hon. John S. Treat was elected a director for New Hampshire in the New England Retail & Wholesale Marble Dealers' Association.

Among the guests at York beach last week were the fellowing from this city: Mrs. W. C. Moat, C. P. Moat, J. Conlon, H. Fisher Eldredge, Miss Sadie Eldredge, Mrs. H. F. Eldredge, Miss Nettie Eldredge, at Hotel Bartlett; George W. Hall and wife, at the Ocean house; Mrs. H. M. Sullivan, S. E. Rider, L. H. Fellows, at the Atlantic house. Stillman B. Allen, Esq., of Boston, and wife, were at the Marshall house. Everett Stevens and wife, Miss Alice M. Stevens and Miss Helen M. Stevens, of Malden, Mass., were at the Ocean house.

The Boston Sunday Globe's mountain resort reports announce among the arrivals last week, at the Summit house, Charles K. Wadham and J. Pray Wadham; at the Fabyan, W. G. Myers; at the Sinclair house, Bethlehem, Col. Charles A. Sinclair. Hon. John G. Sinclair of Orlando, Fla., is announced to arrive at the Sinclair house this week.

Mrs. Aaron Mason, of Stoneham, Mass., is visiting her brother, Mr. Pierrepont Hammond of Eliot, Me.

Mr. Joseph Odiorne has been appointed general passenger agent of the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis railroad.

Rev. A. P. Peabody, D. D., is passing the summer at Beverly. The doctor's interesting address at the 70th anniversery of the South Parish Sunday school, recently delivered in the Unitarian church, will be printed; the subscription list is at Goodrich's.

MARITIME NOTES.

The schooners Clara E. Simpson, Houtvet master, from Georgetown, D. C., and Grace K. Green, Seaward master, from Hoboken, both of this port, arrived at Boston on Friday last.

The schooner yacht Clyde has been lying at anchor between the southern extremity of Badger's island and the navy yard for several days.

The Strafford Guards Veteran Association, composed of men who as members of the Strafford Guards, of Dover, were stationed at Fort Constitution during the war of secession, with honorary members and invited guests came down the river in the steamer Cocheco on Saturday, and went to the fort to have their annual reunion and picnic. A considerable number of them returned to Dover by the five o'clock P. M. train from this city, the rest going back on the steamer.

The steamer Cocheco came down on Sunday from Dover with a large party of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, on a trip to the Shoals.

The steamer James Sampson had an excursion party of about fifty persons from Dover, and the Undine a party of about equal numbers from Newmarket, on Sunday. Both boats went outside the harbor, and reported a very pleasant trip, although there was a little more sea than some of the passengers cared for. The steamers went up river about half-past three o'clock in the afternoon.

The boats were mostly out on the river Sunday. The day proving to be very pleasant in the afternoon, there were many teams going out into the environs, so that it was noticeable that the streets were very quiet.

Charles H. White sent this morning to Newburyport sixty dozen cunners ready prepared for the pan, and packed in ice. They were caught off Wahle's-back Saturday night. These fish are very plentiful here now, and very much esteemed by epicures in other places. They are scarce below the Merrimac, on account of the sandy beaches, which they do not frequent.

William H. Goodwin's steam yacht Uncas was at Fernald's slip on Sunday, having come up from Gerrish's island with a private party.

The British schooner Maud Pye, bound from this port to a port in the provinces, collided with the schooner Hope in the bay of Fundy on the night of July 27th. Both vessels put in at St. John, N. B., badly damaged.

The schooner Fannie S. Orne, of Southport, arrived at Gloucester, Mass., July 27th, having in tow the British schooner Laura Brown, picked up at sea dismasted, waterlogged and abandoned. The Laura Brown was bound from Parsboro, N. S., to Stonington, Conn., with a cargo of lumber.

Mr. Albert Rowe, so well known as a first-class caterer at many of the noted hotels of Boston and Portsmouth, offers his services to picnics and parties for their comfort and convenience. From personal knowledge of his qualifications we can say that no better can be found.

The first green corn of the season, raised in this region, which has appeared in the Portsmouth market, was brought in on Saturday morning from the market garden of Mr. Pierrepont Hammond of Eliot.

There was such a decided drop in the temperature here on Saturday that many people were walking about wearing overcoats. The wind was blowing a fresh breeze from the northeast. It seemed to be more comfortable in this city than in the outlying towns, consequently there were many fine teams in the city, which were not in a hurry to get out; but few of the farmers, however, came in, on account of the inclemency of the summer day.

The bars of the jail at Brentwood were cut on Friday night, and also the telephone wires between the county farm and this city. Five inmates are reported to have skipped, and to have been moving about the streets here on Saturday.

The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in their hall on Market street on Thursday evening, Aug. 2d, at 7:45 o'clock.

A river-steamboat man, who claimed to be a first-class democrat, made a violent harangue against "Josh. Foster" of Foster's Democrat, Dover, on Friday, at steamboat wharf here. He asserted that Joshua is a "mugwump." Go, carry the news to Joshua!

The eastern division station of the Boston & Maine railroad at Saco was broken into on the night of July 27th, the safe blown open, and between forty and fifty dollars stolen. The railroad tickets and about $200 worth of mileage tickets were unmolested. The explosion blew the safe door to the opposite side of the office. The office clock stopped at 12:30.

"Junius," who writes interesting letters to our esteemed colemporary the Times, presumably from Concord, asks "What has become of our State Law Reporter?" The last seen of the lad, he was on his return from the St. Louis convention laboring with his peer, Mr. Connor, to convince him of the propriety of contributing liberally toward the expense of running a prohibition ticket in New Hampshire, to the end that it might aid in carring the state for the democrats.

To Save Life

Frequently requires prompt action. An hour's delay waiting for the doctor may be attended with serious consequences, especially in cases of Croup, Pneumonia, and other throat and lung troubles. Hence, no family should be without a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has proved itself, in thousands of cases, the best Emergency Medicine ever discovered. It gives prompt relief and prepares the way for a thorough cure, which is certain to be effected by its continued use.

S. H. Latimer, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ga., says: "I have found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a perfect cure for Croup in all cases. I have known the worst cases relieved in a very short time by its use; and I advise all families to use it in sudden emergencies, for coughs, croup, &c."

A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middletown, Tenn., says: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes E. Bragdon, of Palestine, Texas, "believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died."

Secure from Harm

There is something at once touching and beautiful in the contemplation of the universal confidence reposed in SANFORD'S GINGER—and justly so.

With what alacrity it responds to the cry of distress. No cramp or pain or cold or chill has ever made a demand upon it for relief or cure that has not met with instant and grateful response.

It is sure to check any disturbance of the bowels, instantly relieve cramps and pains, prevent indigestion, destroy disease germs in water drunk, restore the circulation when suspended by a chill, a frequent cause of cholera morbus, break up colds and fevers, and ward off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often dissuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerol is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerol will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerol will be positively improved in wearing quality, as the oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

Price 25 cents per bottle.

BILIOUSNESS.

This very common complaint, which is caused by a dormant or inactive liver, can be cured in a short time by using Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, as can also the various diseases arising from inactive liver or kidneys. These organs, if inactive, will allow impure blood to enter the heart, causing tightness about that organ and palpitation.

She suffered thirty years.

MRS. DUDLEY CHANDLER, of Melrose, Mass., says: "I had suffered with Palpitation of the Heart more than thirty years before I found anything to give me essential relief. Last fall I tried Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, and, remarkable as it was, this Compound relieved me in two days, so that for several months afterwards I felt not the slightest touch of it, and am perfectly free from it now. Sometimes, before I took this Compound, the pulsations of my heart were so violent as to shake my whole body with rapid agitations, and at times I fainted and became entirely insensible. Now I am perfectly free from all this suffering. Consequently I can most sincerely and earnestly recommend this Compound to all like sufferers, as pre-eminently the best medicine I ever knew for Palpitation of the Heart."

This Compound is purely Vegetable, and strengthens and builds up the system while it eradicates disease.

Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

LIFE IN YOKOHAMA.

Curious Sights in the City—Native Character and Customs.

In visiting Japan from this country the direct course is to cross the continent to San Francisco, whence a three weeks' voyage will land the traveler in the commercial capital of Yokohama. When Commodore Perry opened this port in 1854 with a fleet of the American navy, it was scarcely more than a fishing village, but it has now a population of 130,000, with well built streets of dwelling houses, the thoroughfares broad, cleanly and all macadamized. The town extends along the level shore, but is backed by a half moon of low, wooded hills known as the Bluffs, upon which are the villas of the foreign residents, built after the European and American styles. A deep, broad canal surrounds the city, passing by the large warehouse and connected with the bay at each end, being crossed by several handsome and substantial bridges. From the Bluffs there is a charming and extended view. In the west, seventy miles away, the white, cloud like cone of Fujiyama, the one volcanic mountain of Japan, can be clearly discerned, while all about the visitor lie the attractive villas, beautiful gardens and groves of ornamental trees belonging to the foreign settlers.

In looking about Yokohama, everything strikes us as curious; every new sight is a revelation, while in all directions tangible representations of the strange pictures we have seen upon fans, Satsuma and lacquered ware are presented to view. One is struck by the partial nudity of men, women and children, the extremely simple architecture of the dwelling houses, the peculiar vegetation, the extraordinary salutations between the common people who meet each other upon the streets, the trading bazars and the queer, toyllike articles which fill them, children flying kites in the shape of hideous yellow monsters—each subject becomes a fresh study. Men propelling vehicles, like horses between the shafts, and trotting off at a six mile pony gait, is a singular sight to a stranger. So are the naked coolies, working by fours, bearing heavy bales or hogsheads swung from their shoulders upon stout poles, while they shout a measured chant by means of which to keep step. No beggars are seen upon the streets. The people are neat and cleanly. The houses are special examples of this—very small, seldom over twenty feet square and one story in height. All persons, foreigners or natives, take off their shoes before entering upon the polished floors. The conviction forces itself upon us that such universal neatness and cleanliness must extend even to the moral character of the people. A spirit of gentleness, industry and thrift is observable everywhere, imparting an Arcadian atmosphere to these surroundings.

In the houses which we enter there are found neither chairs, tables nor bedsteads; the people sit, eat and sleep upon the floors, which are at all times as clean as a newly laid table cloth. Here and there upon the roadsides moss grown shrines bearing sacred emblems are observed, before which women, but rarely men, are seen bending. The principal religions of Japan are Shinto and Buddhism, subdivided into many sects. The Shinto is mainly a form of hero worship, successful warriors being canonized as martyrs are in the Roman Catholic church. Buddhism is another form of idolatry, borrowed originally from the Chinese. As we travel inland, places are pointed out to us where populous cities once stood, but where no ruins mark the spot. A dead and buried city in Europe or Asia leaves rude but almost indistructible remains to mark where great communities once built temples and monuments, and where they lived and thrived, like those historic examples of mutability, Memphis, Paestum or Delhi, but it is not so in Japan. When it is remembered of what ephemeral material the natives build their dwellings, namely, of light bamboo frames and paper, their utter disappearance ceases to surprise us. It is a curious fact that this people, contemporary with Greece and Rome at their zenith, who have only reared cities of wood and temples of lacquer, have outlived the classic nations whose half ruined monuments form our choicest models. The Hellenic and Latin races have passed away, but Japan still remains, without a dynastic change and with an inviolate country.

In journeying inland, we are struck with many peculiarities showing how entirely opposite to our own methods are many of theirs. At the post stations the horses are placed in stalls with their heads to the passageway, and their tails show in place of their heads. Instead of iron shoes, the Japanese pony is shod with closely braided rice straw. Carpenters draw the plane toward them, instead of pushing it from them. It is the same in using a saw, the teeth being set accordingly. The tailor sews from him, not toward his body, and holds his thread with his toes. The women ride astride, like the Hawaiians. Manufacturing of various sorts is carried on to a large extent. We have evidence enough of this in the variety and quantity of native articles which are imported thence into this country. Yet the use of mechanical contrivances for the purpose of production is little known. Hand work is nearly the only process employed. The mode of husking rice which is common will illustrate this, being performed as follows: The grain is placed in a sort of mortar, into which a pestle falls, it being attached to a horizontal bar of wood supported in the middle by a fulcrum. On the end opposite to the pestle a man takes his position, and by stepping on and off the end of the bar he raises and lets fall the pestle upon the rice. Machinery is being gradually introduced from Europe and America, but is still regarded by the common people with distrust.—M. M. Ballou in Boston Herald.

Growth of the Brain.

The human brain reaches its greatest weight between the ages of 14 and 20 in both sexes; after that it grows continually smaller through life. While intelligence is rapidly increasing from 20 to 60 years of age, the brain is diminishing. The time that a man knows most is from 70 to 80; but then his brain is smaller than when he was a boy between 7 and 14, the age when he thought he knew the most.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Our Coal Mines.

Coal is now found in about thirty different states of the Union and seven territories. In 1887 the little state of Rhode Island supplied 6,000 tons out of the total product of 129,993,253 tons.—Arkansaw Traveler.

When they leave us, the exodus of our bodily troubles is doubly welcome if their departure is unaccompanied by pain. It is the fault of the best of commendable cathartics, which act solely upon the bowels, that in operation they gripe and weaken these organs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters produce a laxative effect, but neither causes pain nor weaken the abdominal region or the stomach. This is pre-eminently the alterative which a constipated, bilious or dyspeptic person should use, since a resort to it involves no bodily discomfort nor a violent reaction. The liver is aroused, the stomach benefited, and the habit of body speedily and permanently improved by it. Fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles are among the maladies for which recorded experience has proved it to be efficacious. It is a wholesome appetizer, and a far more reliable tranquillizer of the nerves than stomach-disturbing narcotics and sedatives.

For the relief and cure of the inflammation and congestion called a "cold in the head" there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other modes of treatment have proved of no avail.

Ladies Who Bloat.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

WHEN HE HAD RIDDEN ON.

She was a poor, unlettered maid,
With but one gown to wear.
He, riding down the street, delayed,
To gaze—for she was fair.
He spoke with her, as gallants may,
And then he rode away.

He sighed to see such beauty drest
In garments poor and plain.
Some feeling stirred within his breast
That was akin to pain.
He spurred his steed and galloped on—
She watched till he was gone.

In time the wheel of fortune brought
The maiden gold and place.
By fashion clothed, by masters taught,
They called her "Queen of Grace."
She heard it with a bitter sigh,
For he had ridden by.

The robes a princess might have worn,
The learning—came too late!
She felt a Cynic's blighting scorn
For such a tardy Fate.
The need of all these gifts had gone
When he had ridden on.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in Frank Leslie's.

Photographs of Lightning.

Photographs of lightning flashes, recently secured by A. H. Binden, of Wakefield, Mass., are most interesting pictures, proving the fact (before suspected) that the flashes have a sinuous or rotary motion, being twisted like a rope or ribbon during its progress to the earth. The cloud effects in the pictures are also very fine.—Boston Post.

Like the Light Weights

Of the professional pugilistic, the kidneys are small but active in a state of health. Their secretion contains impurities productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy, if allowed to remain. When they are inactive, the blood becomes choked with animal debris capable of destroying life. To promote their activity when sluggish with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is not only to guard against the diseases mentioned, but to prevent the fatty degeneration and ultimate destruction of the organs by those exceedingly dangerous maladies—Bright's disease and diabetes. Activity of the bladder also insures it against the formation of gravel, which it sometimes requires one of the most dangerous and painful operations in surgery to remove. Gravel, moreover, is a most agonizing complaint. The Bitters further commend themselves by remedying constipation, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and nervousness, and nullify influences productive of malarial disease.

An Italian girl only eleven years old was married to an Italian man by a New York alderman July 27th. Her parents propose to make it warm for the alderman and the husband.

He Offended the Empress.

The Veritzins were boyars of enormous wealth and power. Paul held a high office in court. One night, glittering with jewels and orders, the young prince, who was one of the handsomest men in Russia, danced in a quadrille opposite the empress.

As she passed him in the dance she fancied that his eyes scanned her gross figure with covert amusement. After the quadrille she beckoned to him, and, with a smile, handed him her tiny ivory tablets, containing seven pages, one for each day in the week. On the first was written: "The imperial ball room, St. Petersburg." On the last: "The mines, Siberia."

He read it, his face grew gray as that of a corpse, bowed low, kissed her hand and withdrew. "taking," says the old chronicle, "his wife, the beautiful Princess of Novgorod, with him. He was heard to say as he left the ball room: 'My minutes are numbered; let us not lose one.'"

Flight or resistance was impossible. The hold of Catharine on her victims was inexorable as death. Prince Veritzin was forced to remain passive in his palace, while each day the power, the wealth and the happiness that life had given him were stripped from him.

First, he was degraded from all his offices at court; next, his estates were confiscated by the crown; his friends were forbidden to hold any communication with him; his very name, one of the noblest in Russia, was taken from him, and he was given that of a serf. Then his wife and children were driven out of the palace to herd with beggars.

"On the last day," says the record, "Paul Veritzin, in rags and barefoot, chained to a convict, bade an eternal farewell to his home and departed to the dark and icy north. He was seen of men no more."—"Life of Prince Paul Veritzin."

The Explorer in Africa.

Now, it may be a surprise to the unenlightened to learn that probably no explorer in forcing his passage through Africa has ever, for more than a few days at a time, been off some beaten track. Probably no country in the world, civilized or uncivilized, is better supplied with paths than this unmapped country. Every village is connected with some other village, every tribe with the next tribe, every state with its neighbor, and, therefore, with all the rest. The explorer's business is simply to select from this network of tracks, keep a general direction and hold on his way. Let him begin at Zanzibar, plant his foot on a native footpath, and set his face toward Tanganyika. In eight months he will be there. He has simply to persevere.

From village to village he will be handed on, zigzagging it may be sometimes, to avoid the impassable barriers of nature, or the rarer perils of hostile tribes, but never taking to the woods, never guided solely by the stars, never, in fact, leaving a beaten track till hundreds and hundreds of miles are between him and the sea, and his interminable footpath ends with a canoe on the shores of Tanganyika. Crossing the lake, landing near some native village, he picks up the thread once more. Again he plods on and on, now on foot, now by canoe, but always keeping his line of villages, until one day suddenly he sniffs the sea breeze again, and his faithful foot wide guide lands him on the Atlantic seaboard.—Tropical Africa.

Methods of Reducing Flesh.

We Americans used to have the reputation of being a thin and wiry people, but among women, at least, one hears just now more queries as to methods of taking off flesh than of putting it on. The number of specialists, mostly women, who treat women for superfluous avoirdupois is growing all the time. They never seem to lack patients, and one or two drive expensive turnouts and import dreams of gowns. Each establishment has its own method of restoring shape and comeliness, but they agree in this one particular, treatment is paid for by the month and the reduction process is timed to your wishes—you may take it fast or you may take it slow.

If you are a person of leisure and can devote yourself to your figure, you are trained down in three months, though you may find it a difficult matter to summon strength to walk three blocks when the business is fairly under way. If you can't afford to weaken yourself in such fashion, the period is doubled, and in six months or eight months after less violent measures you may order a gown of the waist measure you please, without, so they say, suffering inconvenience meanwhile. It is a more difficult matter, however, to control wrinkles, which nearly always follow any successful attempt to make a fleshy woman thin.—Chicago Herald.

Wreckers of the Bahamas.

The Bahamas are said to have been settled as early as 1629, and their population is estimated to be about 40,000 souls. But they are a listless, indolent lot, to whom simple existence is the highest aspiration. For the most part the language is a curious mixture of the English, Spanish and negro tongues. Sponge gathering, fishing, conch gathering, fruit picking and wrecking constitute about all the labor done. The islands swarm with these wreckers, nearly all good natured souls, who regard everything cast upon the shores, every vessel that grounds upon the dangerous wrecks and cays, and every craft that can even be lured upon the rocks, as their rightful gain, and receive all such ocean salvage as if the blessing of Heaven accompanied it; though for that matter our own government permits quite as bad a state of things at Key West and along the Pine islands off the coast of Florida.—Edgar L. Wakeman in St. Louis Republic.

A Sixteenth Century Map.

In the National library at Paris there is a Spanish globe 350 years old, on which the Congo follows in a remarkable manner the course now given to that river on the maps. All the best maps in the Sixteenth century showed the Congo as rising in the lake far inland, while in this century we first tried to identify the Congo with the Niger, and then for many years made it flow north.—Chicago Herald.

MAIL CARRIERS' EXPERIENCES.

Some of the Tales They Can Tell—Chat with a Reporter.

What family jars has the letter carrier witnessed; of what romantic stories has he been the bearer! Many little missives has he carried to the love sick maiden, which she has tenderly placed beneath her pillow at night, to sleep and to dream on. Then again what bitter memories have some of his errands evoked! What aching hearts have longed for absent loved ones, for some message that would tell of their existence, and when death rapped at the door the letter carrier was the first to bear the announcement.

These were the thoughts that suggested themselves to a reporter the other day as he contemplated "one of the best" hurrying along from door to door of a populous tenement district. The shrill whistle sounded at frequent intervals denoted his coming, and from window and basement dozens of heads protruded and asked the one all absorbing question, "Anything for me?" It was amusing to see their different expressions as they received the little envelopes. Some were enraptured and kissed the paper passionately, while others frowned and glanced anxiously at the bearer. Perhaps some creditor demanded payment for an overdue bill, or perhaps the scrawl meant even more.

"You would like to know just what kind of life this is?" remarked a carrier. "Well, it is not quite as rosy at it appears. It is getting better, however, every year, and now that we are about to participate in the benefits of the eight hour law work will be more pleasant."

The reporter had followed the carrier from block to block until every letter had been delivered. Then, as he had a few moments to spare, the gray coated official sat down to tell his story.

"I don't know of any business where we see more of human life than ours," he commenced. "The lights and shadows of life are pretty distinctly marked and we see them both. Sometimes we feel just as much pleasure in delivering a letter as the receiver in getting it. Sometimes when an ominous black bordered envelope falls into our hands we are sorry that we have to deliver it. Just what hours we will have to work after the rearrangement I do not know," he said. "At present our duties are pretty onerous. In the branch offices collectors have to report as early as 4:40 o'clock in the morning, or five minutes before the regular time for starting out. Forty-five minutes are then consumed in collecting from the various boxes, after which we return to the station with the mail. Then we start to face up.

"You don't know what facing up means? Well, that is what we call sorting our mail and getting it in order for our route. Facing up takes all the time up to 6 o'clock. Then we start out and deliver the letters. We make a prompt return to the office. Collections have in the meantime been made and again we start facing up.

"Every trip is but a repetition of the other. We make them hourly, and are kept constantly on the move until 11 o'clock. Then we swing. This is what we call taking a rest. In other words, there is no work for us to do until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Then we come on again and work until the darkness of evening has fallen over the city.

"You want to know what we see on the route?" and the letter carrier dusted a few grains of cigar ashes from his bag. "Well, it is funny just what we do see; then again it is sad. The saddest of all my experience occurred one day when I delivered a letter to an old man who lived alone in a dilapidated house on Park row. It was a mourning letter, and as I handed it to him the old man's fingers trembled. He tore it open convulsively, and as he read the lines he tottered and fell into my arms. The letter was from his daughter, who lived with her brothers in a fashionable house up town. It stated that her mother, the old man's wife, was dead and would be buried that afternoon. The girl also warned her father not to attend the funeral or there would be a scene, as his own sons would not permit him there.

"He wept as he told me his story. There had been a quarrel, and he had been driven from home. He had never darkened it up to that time. That day my duties brought me around Grace church. I saw the funeral cortege, but what attracted me most was the figure of the old man outside on the sidewalk. His lips quivered with emotion as he saw the casket that contained the remains of his wife, but he dared not approach. He held a daisy in his hand, perhaps in remembrance of other and happier days, and he was still turning it idly when I passed along.

"Yes, it is a funny kind of life, half sunshine, half clouds. We have our own troubles to worry us as well as other people's. We meet all nationalities, and hear all kinds of languages spoken. We get letters with writing such as none could understand; we have to examine and look out for log letters, and are held responsible for any error. Log letters are undirected ones. We are supposed to know all our route, and see that it gets to its proper destination. Well, it is time for me to start, so good-by," and the letter carrier walked briskly away.—New York Star.

In a Jamaica Kitchen.

The kitchen, which is always an outside cabin, is minus a chimney; an elevated sort of range or hob is built out into the floor, on which the cooking is done, sometimes by means of charcoal, but oftener with brushwood and smaller sticks, the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. There is generally an old fashioned brick oven outside for baking bread, but it is seldom used, as few families now bake their own bread. They buy it if near or in a village from a baker's cart which makes its rounds in the country from the nearest store, where it can be procured fresh twice a week. Many households do without the article altogether, or only get enough to serve with "early morning coffee," a small bit of toast being put with each cup. They use in its place some of the substitutes of which are classed under the one generic term, "bread kind." These consist of boiled or baked yam, roasted bread fruit, potatoes, rice, cooked unripe plantains, "bamme" and "cassava cakes," both of which are breads made from the grated manioc root from which tapioca is also prepared.—Detroit Free Press.

THE TRADE MARK S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD

An Important Announcement

About six weeks ago, while at business, I was suddenly attacked with excruciating pains in my feet, knees and hands. So severe the attack that I took my bed immediately, and in two or three days my joints were swollen to almost double their natural size, and sleep was driven from me. After suffering the most excruciating pain for a week, using liniments and various other remedies, a friend who sympathized with my helpless condition, said to me:

"Why don't you get Swift's Specific and use it. I will guarantee a cure, and if it does not the medicine shall cost you nothing."

I at once secured the S. S. S., and after using it the first day had a quiet night and refreshing sleep. In a week I felt greatly benefitted. In three weeks I could sit up and walk about the room, and after using six bottles I was out and able to go to business. Since then I have been regularly at my post of duty, and stand on my feet from nine to ten hours a day, and am entirely free from pain. These are the plain and simple facts in my case, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries relative thereto, either in person or by mail.

We must now place our manufactures by the side of the agriculturist. * * Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.—Thomas Jefferson.

The great interests of an agricultual, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

An extensive domestic market for the surplus produce of the soil is of the first consequence. It is, of all things, that which most effectually conduces to a flourishing state of agriculture.—Alexander Hamilton.

Every manufacturer encouraged in our country makes part of a market for provisions within ourselves, and saves so much money to the country as must otherwise be exported to pay for the manufactures he supplies.—Benj. Franklin.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Jesse P. Bradford, aged twenty-eight years, a freight conductor, was killed near Wentworth station, this state, on the night of July 27th, by falling under the cars. He leaves a wife and child.

Eight thousand navvies (heavy laborers) are on a strike] in Paris, and many have been arrested for rioting.

The coroner's jury at Mitchellstown, Ireland, found that Hon. John Manderville, the political prisoner, died from cruel treatment in the prison.

Agrarian outrages and murders are reported from Ireland.

New York reporters are well off. The Star reporter was sand-bagged and robbed of his diamond pin and silk umbrella, July 29th.

Roger Q. Mills, leader of the democratic majority in Congress, and author of the Mills tariff bill, in introducing it said: "Wealth, prosperity and power will bless the land that is dedicated to free men, free labor and free trade."

The British Hosiery Review indiscreetly remarks: "We venture to assert that England will reap the largest share of any advantages that arise from the adoption of the ideas now advocated by the free trade party in the United States."

The First Maine Cavalry will hold a reunion at Bar Harbor on September 5th. The Maine Central railroad and steamboat lines will probably give reduced rates for the occasion, and ample hotel accommodations have been secured. The Frst Maine Cavalry participated in more battles than any other regiment in the service, as is evidenced by the names of the battlefields inscribed upon their colors.—Penny Post.

We may be mistaken, but our impression is that Bro. Joseph R. Curtis of the Penny Post enlisted in the First Maine Cavalry at its inception, served all through the war without ever being absent from his regiment in the hospital, on sick leave or furlough, and was honorably mustered out at the close of the war—a record of which any man might justly be proud.

It is said that Mr. Hiram Baker has offered $3,000 for the Stover field at York, and that if his offer is accepted he will build an elegant summer residence thereon.

THE GIANT BANYAN.

Description of the Big Tree of Calcutta's Botanical Garden.

But the great "sight" of Calcutta is unquestionably its splendid Botanical garden, on the further shore of the Hooghly, and the giant banyan tree which stands in the midst of its palms and bamboos like a king amid his courtiers. It is true that the five mile drive thither across the Canning bridge and through the endless bazars of Howrah (the Brooklyn of Calcutta) is anything but an easy enterprise to achieve satisfactorily. If you start in the morning the whole journey there and back is one long martyrdom to a heat and dust and glare which only those who have been in India can fully appreciate. If you start in the evening you arrive just in time to see the whole garden vanish from your eyes into the deepening darkness of night, and have to console yourself perforce with the time honored joke, "There was nothing to be seen, and I saw it thoroughly." The latter result attended the first effort which we ourselves made to reach the renowned banyan, and the bazar happening to be unusually full that night, our homeward drive through it in the dark, with an accompaniment of shouting and whip cracking worthy of a royal "progress," vividly recalled Sir George Trevelyan's famous definition of "hi!" as "a monosyllable used by cabmen and omnibus drivers preparatory to running over deaf people."

But such a spectacle as the monster tree of Calcutta is well worth a double journey, and our second attempt was more fortunate than our first. Starting from our hotel at 4 p. m., we reached the garden a little before 5, and had already driven more than half way across it when our "gharri" (carriage) halted suddenly at the entrance of a long, straight avenue flanked by two ranges of lofty trees, and our Bengal driver, pointing to the far end of it with his lean, brown forefinger, said impressively, "Dekho, burrah gach wahan hai" (look, there is the big tree).

We followed the pointing finger with our eyes, but saw nothing except a thick grove of small trees, in which the path seemed to lose itself, and this was all we could make out till we got within about 100 yards of it. Then, to our amazement, we found that the supposed grove was all one giant tree, and that its countless trunks were nothing more than the shoots which it had sent down into the earth from each of its mighty boughs, to take root there and spring up again till the whole plantation was covered. After walking many yards beneath one huge bough, and noting that this giant was only one among scores—some of which, although so vast and ponderous as to need supports of solid brickwork, seem mere twigs compared with the enormous mass of the parent stem—I began to have a clearer idea of the real size of this vegetable Goliath than I could ever have gained from the inscription attached to one of its largest branches stating that the girth of its trunk is 42 feet, that the circumference of its crown is 850, and that it has sent down into the earth 252 "aerial roots."

The same inscription tells you that the tree is more than 100 years old. When it was first planted Warren Hastings was turning his face homeward to figure in the greatest political trial which England had seen since Cromwell and his grim comrades sat in judgment upon "the man Charles Stuart." Two-thirds of India and the whole of Burmah were still independent of the British crown. Frederick the Great was still reigning in Berlin. The French revolution lay hid in the unknown future, and the battle of American independence, though nobly fought, was not yet won. And it may be that when not one stone of Calcutta shall remain upon another, and when tigers shall prowl and vultures shriek over the ruins of the viceroy's palace, the giant tree will still upreir amid a vast solitude those mighty boughs that once shaded the bravest men and fairest women of India, a silent and solitary mourner at the tomb of that great empire whose childhood was coeval with its own.—David Ker in New Times.

Danger in Sea Bathing.

Sea bathing is a common, but often unsuspected, source of injury to the sense of hearing. People should always be careful how they wash their ears at home. In this operation, simple though it may appear, and harmless as it is in other respects, a portion of the fluid—small it may be—passes into the outer passage of the ear and becomes lodged there, as it is a difficult matter to dry this passage, especially in the inner half of its extent. The water which thus remains is gradually removed by evaporation and absorption, and a chilled condition of the passage results, highly conducive to inflammation of the part, and subsequent impairment of the organ of hearing. To obviate this danger stop the ears with oiled wool.

Bathing in the sea is dangerous in other ways for old people, for very young children (especially before the first dentition has been completed), for persons of full habit of body, for those whose circulation is weak or irregular or who are suffering from heart disease, chronic chest affections, disorders of the brain or nervous system, or local accumulations of blood, such as hemorrhage from the nose, lungs, etc.—Home Journal.

Folk Lore of the Oak.

The oak is a tree celebrated in mythology and folk lore. Many of the events of the early Jewish history are connected with it, and the oak of Shechem, the oaks of Bashan and other trees of the same kind seem to attest the importance of this tree. It was even more important to the Druids, who venerated it and its parasite, the mistletoe. Mysterious properties were sometimes accorded to oak trees. In one part of England ague was cured by passing the sufferer under an oak branch that had taken root in the ground. Near certain cross roads in Hertfordshire stood an oak which was approached to effect a cure for the same malady. This was done by pegging a lock of hair into the tree and wrenching it from the head.

An old German law forbade any one from cutting down an oak tree. The oak and the hazel were said to be on bad terms, and could not agree. In England this prohibition seems formerly to have included other trees.—F. S. Bassett in Globe-Democrat.

Sunshine and Good Health.

After thirty years of traveling in all climates of the earth, we are satisfied that sunlight is one of the most important factors of life, and indispensable to vigorous health. Shade tends to weaken the skin, and acts deleteriously on the nerves and liver. We always, therefore, wherever we sojourn select a room on the sunny side of the house, making little account of the outlook in other respects. The finest prospect toward the north is not for a moment to weigh against the rays of the cheering, life giving orb of day. We recommend this practice to our readers,—Dr. Joseph Simms.

There is no doubt that one of the most useful qualifications of an orator is a good voice. Burke failed in the house through the lack of it, while William Pitt, through the possession of it, was a ruler there at the age of 21. Mr. Lecky says that O'Connell's voice, rising with an easy and melodious swell, filled the largest building and triumphed over the wildest tumult, while at the same time it conveyed every inflection of feeling with the most delicate flexibility. The great majority of celebrated orators have been aided by the possession of a good voice. Webster's voice, on the occasion of his reply to Senator Dickinson, had such an effect that one of his listeners felt all the night afterward as if a heavy cannonade had been resounding in his ears. Garrick used to say he would give a hundred guineas if he could say "Oh!" as Whitefield did. Mr. Gladstone's voice has the music and the resonance of a silver trumpet.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Economy of Cremation.

To the poorer classes cremation especially appeals, because it is more economical and less formal than burial. It would be well for each state to try the experiment of cremating its dead paupers instead of continuing to enlarge its Potter's fields. Certainly cremation practiced under governmental auspices in this way would demonstrate its practical superiority. The more the subject is pondered the deeper must grow the conviction that cremation is the most rational and efficient means of modifying the grim and ghastly victory of death.

Graveyards, and the manner in which our boasted civilization buries its dead, are responsible for most of the superstitions of mankind regarding spooks, goblins and the whole retinue of supernatural abnormities. The rattling skeleton, exhumed after years of repose in the grave, sets astir the dreadful fancies of the least susceptible witness.—The Epoch.

Glasses for the Near Sighted.

The near sighted child should wear spectacles, because they are the best preventive against increase of near sightedness, and also because he loses a great part of his education in not being able to see more than a few feet away. When a person grows old the power of accommodation is lost, and even if he be not near sighted, the hardening of the crystalline lens prevents sight at short distances. Hence he is obliged to wear glasses. The vast majority of persons who wear glasses can see as well without them. They use them to avoid a constant strain on the eyes. The act of focalization is a muscular one, and uses up nervous energy. The oversighted eye, in which the focus comes behind the retina, has to perform this muscular act continually. The results are headache, irritability and nausea. The only remedy in such cases is to wear glasses. —Dr. David Webster.

Benefits of Lung Exercise.

But the greatest benefits to be derived from lung exercise are not in the cases of healthy individuals, but rather in those whose vital capacity is below the normal—who are hollow chested, stooping and feeble in their breathing. The imperfect development of their respiratory functions invites disease; their lungs are vulnerable. Proper exercise will throw off this debility and render them less liable to disease. We may go even a step further and say that in many cases where lung diseases actually exist breathing exercise is one of the most valuable elements in treatment. I have often been gratified with the way in which a consolidated lung in chronic pneumonia of long standing and slow progress would improve under proper lung exercise. Indeed, in some of these cases it has seemed that properly regulated exercises have rendered greater service than could be derived from ordinary drugs.—John L. Davis, A. B., M. D.

We have just received a new volume of travels through our sister republic, entitled "Mexico, Picturesque, Political, Progressive," the joint work of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Blake, of Boston, and Margaret F. Sullivan, of Chicago. Both ladies have attained a high position in American literature, and each has a distinct individuality of her own. Their observations during their journey were confined to no one thing, but were close, thoughtful and universal. In the volume before us Mrs. Sullivan writes of the religious, political and educational interests of Mexico, and of its material resources. Mrs. Blake considers picturesque Mexico, its social and domestic life, and literature. "Mexico: Picturesque, Political, Progressive," when once in hand will be read through with the most intense interest and substantial profit. Price $1.25.

Peculiar

Many peculiar points make Hood's Sarsaparilla superior to all other medicines. Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's. Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is now more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time, and retained its popularity and confidence among all classes of people so steadfastly.

PASTORATE ENDED.

The twenty years pastorate of Rev. William H. Alden, D. D., over the Middle street Baptist society, is ended, he having preached his farewell sermon on Sunday evening last. At the morning service on Sunday six candidates were baptised. On Monday evening a reception was given the retiring pastor in the chapel.

MYSTIC VETERANS AHOY!

The Mystic Veterans are hereby officially notified to assemble on the Mystic wharf, foot of Daniel street, at ten o'clock sharp on Thursday forenoon, Aug. 2d, to embark on board the United States line-of-battle ship Mystic, Commodore "Rashe" Trefethen commanding, for the annual voyage to Fort McClary. Due notice has been served upon Clerk-of-the-weather Greely; a competent force of men have also been engaged to plane down, sand-paper and varnish the river from the Mystic landing to the government mole at the fort on the morning of the day specified, so that no Veteran need absent himself through fear of internal unpleasantness being caused by rough weather on the passage down—coming back it is not supposed anybody will care.

N. B. It is quite possible that Veterans who have taken part in the former excursion of the association, have not received a personal notice from the committee of arrangements this year. All such are hereby notified, "per order," that the omission is unintentional, and that they are to consider themselves notified, precisely as though they had received a call from the committee. Their presence will be looked for, and their absence regretted. Those attending under such circumstances will be allowed to land first at the fort, and carry the heaviest hampers ashore.

M. VET, Comomdore's Clerk.

WHICH IS "YORK BEACH!"

YORK, ME., July 30th.

Editor of Gazette: In a letter published in last week's Gazette, the writer argues that the railroad station which now bears the name of "York Beach" should retain that name, but he is either so lamentably ignorant of facts or has distorted them so much in presentation that it is almost impossible to gain a clear idea of the reasons pro and con; hence I beg leave to rectify, through your paper, some of his statements, and to state a few facts in addition.

Years ago the bit of beach located near what is now York Beach station was called "Short beach," and is still so called by the residents of York and many of the summer visitors. An enterprising hotel proprietor whose house is located on Short beach has published a bird's-eye view of York beach and surroundings, which is doubtless the best authority attainable upon some of the items treated in your last week's correspondent's letter.

According to this bird's-eye view or map there are fifty-four cottages and seven hotels on Long beach, all of which use the Long Beach station, a fact of which anybody may be assured by visiting the station at the time of the arrival and departure of the trains. These hotels accommodate an aggregate of between 600 and 700 people.

One would conclude from your correspondent's letter that York Beach station is located in the midst of a thriving metropolis. Of what does it consist? Of the "ten stores" he mentions, one is permanent. The others come and go with the summer boarders. Aside from the post-office there is one grocery store, and one provision store, while the remainder are ice cream saloons and peanut stands. Within a short radius of "Long Beach station" there are seven stores which do business twelve months in the year. He refers to Dover Bluff, Concordville and Evanston as "all flourishing villages." The map to which I have referred gives Dover Bluff about a dozen cottages, Concordville a few more, and Evanston five dwellings, five sheds and two boat houses. The Bald Head Cliff house, which he says helps to make up "York Beach," is about five miles from the station, and nearly if not all the people who visit it leave the cars at Wells. If, as he says, there are 300 or 400 cottages, the enterprising hotel proprietor has neglected to put about seven-eights of them on his map.

The conclusion I draw from these facts is that if the depot which does the most business is to have the name of York Beach, the claim of Long Beach station is worthy of consideration.

There is another and more important reason why the name should be changed. The beach which has made this resort deservedly famous has been advertised for the last twenty years as "York Beach," and consequently is widely known by that name, while the appellation "Long Beach" is simply a local one to distinguish it from "Short Beach." Last year the York Harbor & Beach railroad was opened, and the station at the western end of the beach was wisely named York Beach. This year this corporation has given the name of York Beach to the station that last year was very properly called Union Bluff, and consequently people who wish to go to the hotels or cottages on the beach buy their tickets and have their baggage checked to "York Beach," and the natural result is annoyance and confusion to the visiting public as well as to the hotel keepers. The people on the Long beach have no desire to interfere with the affairs of the Short beach people, but they do object to having theirs interfered with by others.

Very truly yours,

A SUMMER VISITOR.

BASE BALL.

The Electric club of this city went to Dover on Saturday, and beat the Sawyer club of that city, twenty-one to six.

The game at Manchester on Monday between the home club and the Portsmouths resulted in favor of Manchester, ten to six. O'Connor and Ryan were the Portsmouth battery. Daly did not accompany the club to Manchester.

The Ossipee and Red Stocking base ball clubs played a game on the South street grounds in this city on Monday afternoon, the game at the end standing twenty to four in favor of the Red Stockings, a local amateur organization, the Ossipees being from the U. S. S. Ossipee.

Mr. William T. Dame, previously reported to have been seriously injured by a fall, is gradually recovering. It was intended that he should be carried to the hospital, and was so reported, but some of his friends took him to his home.

The day the Forepaugh circus exhibited in this city last week one of the draught horses died of lung fever, but the number of animals connected with the establishment was not diminished, as a lioness in the menagerie at about the same time gave birth to a cub. The den in which the royal mother and her baby were confined was kept closed during the exhibitions of the afternoon and evening. This is probably the first lion that could ever rightfully claim the honor of being a native of Portsmouth.

To Save Life

Frequently requires prompt action. hour's delay waiting for the doctor may be attended with serious consequences, especially in cases of Croup, Pneumonia, and other throat and lung troubles. Hence, no family should be without a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has proved itself, in thousands of cases, the best Emergency Medicine ever discovered. It gives prompt relief and prepares the way for a thorough cure, which is certain to be effected by its continued use.

S. H. Latimer, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ga., says: "I have found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a perfect cure for Croup in all cases. I have known the worst cases relieved in a very short time by its use; and I advise all families to use it in sudden emergencies, for coughs, croup, &c."

A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middletown, Tenn., says: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes E. Bragdon, of Palestine, Texas, "believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died."

GLYCEROLE !

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes. Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing has been in existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often dissuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

Price 25 cents per bottle.

BILIOUSNESS.

THIS very common complaint, which is caused by a dormant or inactive liver, can be cured in a short time by using Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, as can also the various diseases arising from inactive liver or kidneys. These organs, if inactive, will allow impure blood to enter the heart, causing tightness about the chest and palpitation.

She suffered thirty years.

Mrs. DUDLEY CHANDLER, of Melrose, Mass., says: "I had suffered with Palpitation of the Heart more than thirty years before I found anything to give me essential relief. Last fall I tried Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, and, remarkable as it was, this Compound relieved me in two days, so that for several months afterwards I felt not the slightest touch of it, and am perfectly free from it now. Sometimes, before I took this Compound, the pulsations of my heart were so violent as to shake my whole body with rapid agitations, and at times I fainted and became entirely insensible. Now I am perfectly free from all this suffering. Consequently I can most sincerely and earnestly recommend this Compound to all like sufferers, as pre-eminently the best medicine I ever knew for Palpitation of the Heart."

This Compound is purely Vegetable, and strengthens and builds up the system while it eradicates disease.

Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

THE PILE WORM'S HABITS.

Its Remarkable Ravages in Riddling Timber—An Importation.

Just at high water mark and extending a foot below it, I saw the stanchest timbers wasted away until I could have spanned their circumference with my hand. The constant friction of the waves alone could not have done this. It was the work of that dread enemy of wharf owners and ship masters, the teredo navalis. Now, I could account for the sinking in of the floor of the dock in many places. The worm would attack a pile and, with his numberless comrades, eat and eat away the wood until it was absolutely honeycombed. The waves would then complete the work. The point of attack chosen by these bivalvular pests, in a pile, is from about fifteen inches below up to high water mark. This generally breaks the timber at about midway between the wharf and the surface of the earth.

Imagine a stout pine trunk, of a diameter of a foot and a half, completely filled with long, tortuous channels varying from one-quarter to three-quarters of an inch, and running from outer edge to outer edge. Now, as thin as is this sheet upon which I write these lines, as thin as the transparent division against which the golden honey rests in the waxen comb, so thin are the walls between each of the fatal channels which mark the passage and progress of the worm through the doomed timber. As singular as it may seem, they never break through, they never disturb each other or trespass upon each other's territory. There may be a thousand of them in a single pile, but no instance has yet been found in which one of these passageways intersected another or trenched upon another's right of way. They may all be boring at once—some up, some down, some laterally, some obliquely—and they may make their division walls as thin as it pleases them, but there is never an infraction of this law, of absolute inviolability of each individual's right of way. It will easily be apprehended, therefore, how quickly a timber thus riddled will be worn away by the constant attrition of the tides, until it finally breaks, and brings with it in its fall the beam above, of which it was the support.

A study of the history and habits of this singular worm will be found neither uninteresting nor unprofitable. Its habitat was originally in the tropic seas, but being carried in the timbers of vessels into North American and European waters, it has become the terror and dread of wharfmen and captains of unsheathed sailing craft along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and in the harbors of numbers of Mediterranean cities. According to the classification of Linnæus, this bivalve belongs to the family of pholadidæ, and genus teredo, so called from their habit of destroying ship or other timber. The shell is equal valved, and in form it is short, thick and round and widely open in front and rear. This shell is situated at the inner end of a tube, somewhat cylindrical in shape, and either straight or crooked, as the case may be; this tube being open at each end in the full grown specimens, and lined or coated with a white, chalky paste or substance, which seems to be its digestive apparatus.

The weapon of the teredo is not teeth, as might be supposed. This singular animal has still another peculiarity, dependent, however, upon the one last mentioned, for since its instrument is its foot, so it feeds itself not from the mouth, but from the foot itself. The valves above noted are simply appendages of the foot. In fact, if a teredo should have his foot amputated he would in a most vital sense "lose his grip." In the center of the circular opening of the valves the foot is protruded, like the blade concealed in a spring cane, and the entire arrangement constitutes a boring machine of power inconceivable in so small an object. But the strength of this machine becomes apparent when upon a closer examination one notes the strong rubber like ridges of the valves, which can contract with great force, and the comparatively immense size of the great abductor muscle which enables the teredo to use its sharp foot with the ease of an auger passing through the softest pine.

This worm attains often a great length, but it is usually from one foot to a yard long, its size depending on the length of time it has been in the wood and frequently on the size of the wood itself. It is provided with two respiratory tubes, each of which has a siphon attached to a calcareous, flattened, triangular plate on the outside of the body. It has two heads—if such they can be called—each attached to the extremity of a tube much smaller than the main trunk, and which are each (the small tubes) about six inches long; or, in other words, the main body splits into two small tubes at about a foot or six inches from where the head is in a teredo, and where the tail would be in a snake. This worm is oviparious, and when the young are born (with a smooth shell) they swim around by means of a vibratile cilia; sometimes creeping with the foot until old enough to begin work on a piece of wood. A good, nice, new pile having been selected, they fasten themselves to the wood by means of the suction apparatus in their heads, strike in with their foot and bore inwardly until only the head remains outside. Then they fasten themselves to the opening, flush with its very edge, just as a clerk will fasten sheets of paper together by turning over the sides of a brass clamp, and henceforward their sole aim, object and ambition in life is to grow, bore and make sawdust. Small when they enter, they could no more creep backward out of their original hole after feasting a month or two on a rich pine log than a camel could go through the eye of a needle.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Asteroids as Comets.

Professor Daniel Kirkwood points out that seven of the twenty known comets of short period have disappeared, either by breaking into fragments, like Bila's comet, or by the transformation of the orbit by the influence of Jupiter, as in the case of Lexell's comet. He had already given reasons for thinking that two of the short period comets were asteroids drawn from their orbits by Jupiter's attraction, and he now advances evidence tending to show that the entire twenty were originally small planets.—Arkansaw Traveler.

How Wordsworth Composed.

Wordsworth mainly composed his poems during his rural rambles. It was not an unusual circumstance for him to write with a slate pencil on a smooth piece of stone his newly made lines.—Home Journal.

Cured Many of a Collector.

A man in Denver, Colo., named Lyon, said to have a collection of over 700 pens, no two alike. Some are of steel, some gold, some amalgam, and so on. There are pens pointed fine enough to make lines of microscopic delicacy, and others intended for men who use the first personal pronoun a great deal in their correspondence. The collection embraces specimens from England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany and other European countries, besides America and Canada. Some are in shape like shovels, others resemble a section of stove pipe, and others are delicate and diminutive.—Scientific American.

Uses of Muskrats' Fur.

A Maine fur dealer says that it is astonishing the uses to which muskrats' fur are put. The skins are taken at the city establishments, clipped, colored and put into such shape that they very closely resemble otter, and, if not sold for that are at least represented to be much better than they really are. The fur is never sold for what it really is, but is fixed up to look like something finer, and charged for accordingly.—Boston Budget.

I sugered from a severe cold in my head for months and used everything recommended but could get no relief. Was advised to use Ely's Cream Balm. It has worked like magic in its cure. A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do? —and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

She Was Thoroughly Satisfied.

It takes a good deal to disturb the equanimity of a thoroughly well ordered mind, as the following incident illustrates:

Old Aunt Sally Pratt, all her life a resident of a certain New England village, was one day sitting by her favorite window in an upper chamber of her house. The afternoon was warm and Aunt Sally suddenly dropped asleep. The window was open, and, ten minutes later, the old lady fell forward, and, to the horror of several persons who saw her, she fell out of the window to the ground below. When picked up she gathered herself together in an amazingly short time, glanced up at the window and said calmly:

"Well, well; I've often set at that winder an' wondered how it'd feel to go a-tumblin' out it, and now I know. Well, well, well! Queer how things do turn out sometimes."

The fact that she had turned herself out of the window gave her no concern, although she narrowly escaped being killed.—Detroit Free Press.

"Ah," said the newly hatched chick, with a sigh of relief, "I'm free from the yolk at last."—Harper's Bazar.

Like the Light Weights

Of the professional pugilistic, the kidneys are small but active in a state of health. Their secretion contains impurities productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy, if allowed to remain. When they are inactive, the blood becomes choked with animal debris capable of destroying life. To promote their activity when sluggish with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is not only to guard against the diseases mentioned, but to prevent the fatty degeneration and ultimate destruction of the organs by those exceedingly dangerous maladies—Bright's disease and diabetes. Activity of the bladder also insures it against the formation of gravel, which it sometimes requires one of the most dangerous and painful operations in surgery to remove. Gravel, moreover, is a most agonizing complaint. The Bitters further commend themselves by remedying constipation, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and nervousness, and nullify influences productive of malarial disease.

A Province of Siberia.

The city of Semipalatinsk, which has a population of about 15,000 Russians, Korghis and Tartars, is situated on the right bank of the river Irtish, 480 miles southeast of Omsk and about 900 miles from Tiumen. It is the seat of government of the province of Semipalatinsk, and is commercially a place of some importance, owing to the fact that it stands on one of the caravan routes to Tashkend and central Asia, and commands a large part of the trade of the Kirghis steppe. The country tributary to it is a pastoral rather than an agricultural region, and of its 547,000 inhabitants 497,000 are nomads, who live in 111,000 kibitkas or felt tents, and own more than 3,000,000 head of live stock, including 70,000 camels. The province produces annually, among other things, 45,000 pounds of honey, 370,000 pounds of tobacco, 100,000 bushels of potatoes, and more than 12,000,000 bushels of grain. There are held every year within the limits of the province eleven commercial fairs, the transactions of which amount in the aggregate to about $1,000,000. Forty or fifty caravans leave the city of Semipalatinsk every year for various points in Mongolia and central Asia, carrying Russian goods to the value of from $150,000 to $200,000.

It is hardly necessary, I suppose, to call the attention of persons who think that all of Siberia is an arctic waste, to the fact that honey and tobacco are not arctic products, and that the camel is not a beast of burden used by Eskimos on wastes of snow. If Mr. Frost and I had supposed the climate of southwestern Siberia to be arctic in its character, our minds would have been dispossessed of that erroneous idea in less than twelve hours after our arrival in Semipalatinsk. When we set out for a walk through the city about 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon, the thermometer indicated 89 degs. Fahrenheit in the shade with a north wind, and the inhabitants seemed to regard it as rather a cool and pleasant summer day.—George Kennan in The Century.

A Sunday's Hard Work.

The simple city man who has labored hard for six days, and needs really to lie on his back one day in the week and rest, dresses on this hot Sunday morning more elaborately and painfully than ever. He puts on more starch and more stiffness. So does his wife; so do the children. They then go forth in the hot sun to seek for pleasure. They do not get it in the streets. They board the car. The car is crowded with other stiff and starched, hot and flushed Sunday pleasure seekers. There is no pleasure on the car. They go, then, on board the excursion boat.

It is rammed, jammed and crammed with pleasure skekers. The air is warm from a thousand human corporeal furnaces so near together, and the shady seats are all claimed. Little pleasure is found there. They land at the "summer garden." They toil up a steep hill. They toil down again at night. The boat is not now crowded; it is packed. It is compressed with tired bodies. They arrive in the city. Everything is now arriving in the city. There are waits for cars, and cars more crowded than ever, and nothing but stand up seats. They get home at last, long after dark. It has been a hard day's work, and on Monday morning the simple man of the house, who doth not "foresee the evil and hide himself," wonders why he feels so tired and jaded.—Prentice Mulford in New York Star.

Tiny Pipes for Women.

The question, do nice women smoke? brings up a very pretty implement with which they may smoke if they so choose. The latest novelty exhibited in a Broadway jewelry store is a tiny pipe that only a woman could carry to her lips. Its stem is a trifle shorter and smaller in diameter than the average meerschaum and is made of gold set with garnets, moonstones and emeralds. The mouthpiece is of yellow and pink veined onyx, and the bowl, which might hold half a thimbleful, is heavily set with small gems. The toy is worth something like $100, and at a gilt edged fine affair when cigars are brought in with the coffee, if a lady chooses to remain at the close of dinner, it may make a prettier combination than beauty and the cigarette.

The jeweler says that the first pipe of this sort was made to order for a woman of some social position, and that he has had four or five calls for them since. The talk of ladies smoking is much exaggerated, however. There are numbers of Cubans and Spaniards and some French women of beauty and position who buy cigarettes in person, smoke them at dinners and offer them to lady friends in their boudoirs. But they are only importing a foreign custom, which does not strike any strong root here.—New York Mail and Express.

The True Rule of Study.

The rule to study closely and continuously is a mistake. The "hard student" of whom we hear is a blunder. I go so far as to say the true rule of study is to apply the mind only when work is easy, and when you are prepared beforehand to make it easy. Those who labor twelve, or even ten hours a day, could accomplish more if they labored, with discretion, four hours or five hours or six hours a days, divided into two sections of three hours each. In reality there is nothing a man will find so very easy as brain work if he is in condition. Understand, it is precisely like any other contest—a race or a rowing match or as in a horse race—"condition" is the first thing to be looked after. Healthy and judicious brain work is both easy and delightful, and it should never be performed when it is not so.—M. Maurice, M. D., in Globe-Democrat.

Birds' Code of Punishment.

I believe it is well established that some of the social and associated creatures have a code of punishment. I have seen sparrows deliberately join in the punishment of a rogue. At least so it seemed to me, although I could not discover the special fault of the delinquent. It is especially interesting to see the indignation exceedingly by all the birds when a prowling hawk has despoiled a nest. "Come on!" shouts the king bird; and "At him!" cries every robin; and often the crows for once join the smaller birds. The chase excites the whole neighborhood.—Mary E. Spencer in Globe-Democrat.

THE BALKAN PENINSULA.

Thomas Stevens Writes About the Greek Peasant Woman—Her Weakness.

The Greek women impressed me as being the brightest and most intelligent of any in the Balkan peninsula. The peasant women are less employed in the drudgery of field work than either their Servian or Bulgarian sisters. The result of this is a more refined and feminine appearance, which, per se, renders them far more attractive. Besides this, they are intellectually superior, and almost all are possessed of an elementary education.

The Greek damsel understands the art of making herself attractive far better than the Bulgarian maiden does. She is, in fact, a more desirable commodity of the matrimonial market than the latter, from various standpoints; for, in addition to her other charms, her father, instead of requiring purchase money at her lover's hands, gives a dowry. She is the object of a good deal of chivalrous attention from her male relatives, which surrounds her with an additional halo of romance, and suggests to some extent the devotion and chivalry of ancient Greece. If her father be a man of limited fortune, her brothers consider it a point of honor to contribute their own little savings toward making her marriage portion up to a respectable sum.

Although the Greek peasant woman works less in the fields, this does not mean that she is wanting in industriousness. If her hands are less employed with the hoe or reaping hook, they are deft enough in weaving and spinning the rude native textures for clothing the family. She also acquires ready expertness in trimming and training the grape vines, making wine, butter, cheese, and all the lighter work about the farm.

The holiday costume of the Greek peasant woman is picturesque enough, but in one feature at least it seemed to me rather wanting in gracefulness. On her head is worn either a gaudily colored silk kerchief or a small cap, elaborately embroidered or strung with coins. A short, rakish looking jacket of green or blue cloth is profusely trimmed with gold braid. Down the back, and often falling within a foot of the ground, are long, luxuriant black tresses, usually in two braids. From the waist down her costume is highly suggestive of an inverted balloon. Whether to call the garment skirt or pantaloons was always a question with me. From the waist downward it gets fuller and fuller until it terminates in the "bulge of the balloon," with a hole in either side at the bottom, through which the feet appear. When walking, the "bagginess" of this garment waggles about like the tail of a duck, which few, I believe, have ever thought to be the poetry of motion.

The Greek female, charming though she is on general principles, and, moreover, a devoted wife and mother, has her little weaknesses. The women that chatted and laughed and showed their rows of pearly teeth to me were nearly all addicted to the use of the cigarette. The way they glanced over one another's apparel also led me to believe them vain and envious of their neighbor's superior, or fancifully superior clothes. This I subsequently learned to be a pronounced trait of their character. Their love of finery, of outshining their neighbors and acquaintances in georgeousness of apparel, is one of their strongest ambitions. Few Greek women are so poor but that they manage to keep one costume, made gorgeous with gold thread and elaborate embroidery, to appear in on gala days or when visiting the city. The enterprising Greek maiden, away off in some obscure agricultural community, manages somehow to keep herself informed of city fashions, and, after a manner, to follow them.—Thomas Stevens in Woman.

Chocolate in Guatemala.

In Guatemala chocolate has always been made in the form of round cakes of varying thickness, and during the administration of President Carrera, who governed from 1840 to 1865, the fertile Jesuitical brain discovered a new use for these chocolate cakes. At this time throughout Central America the Jesuits were very wealthy and powerful. Seeing the clouds gathering which burst with such fury upon them in Barrios' rise, they determined to transfer their immense stores of gold to European and other foreign stations of their order, but there existed a heavy export duty on gold. To evade this they decided to ship chocolate, and in the secrecy of their their own houses they molded thirty-two ounces of gold into each cake of chocolate, placed the cargoes on pack mules under trusted men, and sent them to Livingston, the nearest port, for shipment to Europe. A vigilant officer at that port discovered the fraud, and the government confiscated the entire lot, over $400,000, and, strangely enough, had strength enough to refuse to return it. The same idea was not tried again, but who knows how many times it had succeeded before?—Cor. New York Times.

Bridal Outfits in Gotham.

A matrimonial discovery on the east side is that of a store kept by a woman who, as a feature of her business in ladies' underwear, rents out the linen portions of bridal outfits. She enables a girl of moderate resources to go on a tour, or to spend the honeymoon in town, happy in the wearing of those portions of a trousseau as elegant as might content a Fifth avenue belle. Fine textures, elaborate embroidery, and all the whimsical frills known to lingerie, are at her command on rental. At an outlay of five or six dollars she can buy a month's use of these beautiful and soul satisfying garments. The proprietor said that she was doing very well in that line. She had in stock a dozen outfits, as cheap as $3 to as dear as $10 per month, and most of the time they were hired out. She altered them to fit her customers, and freshened them up by new embellishments as fast as they showed wear.—New York Sun.

A Furred Tongue.

According to Dr. Howship Dickinson, a furred tongue is not necessarily an alarming symptom. To some persons it is normal to have a clean tongue, and to others equally normal to have a coated tongue, so that it is impossible to fix any degree or limit of coating as a necessary accompaniment to perfect health.—New York Mail and Express.

TRADE S.S.S. MARK

An Important Announcement

About six weeks ago, while at business, I was suddenly attacked with excruciating pains in my feet, knees and hands. So severe the attack that I took my bed immediately, and in two or three days my joints were swollen to almost double their natural size, and sleep was driven from me. After suffering the most excruciating pain for a week, using liniments and various other remedies, a friend who sympathized with my helpless condition, said to me:

"Why don't you get Swift's Specific and use it. I will guarantee a cure, and if it does not the medicine shall cost you nothing."

I at once secured the S. S. S., and after using it the first day, had a quiet night's and refreshing sleep. In a week I felt greatly benefitted. In three weeks I could sit up and walk about the room, and after using six bottles I was out and able to go to business. Since then I have been regularly at my post of duty, and stand on my feet from nine to ten hours a day, and am entirely free from pain. These are the plain and simple facts in my case, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries relative thereto, either in person or by mail. THOMAS MARTLEY,

NASHVILLE, TENN.—I have waded off a severe attack of rheumatism by a timely resort to Swift's Specific. In all cases where a permanent relief is sought this medicine commends itself for a constitutional treatment that thoroughly eradicates the seeds of disease from the system. Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. NEW YORK, 31 THE ARCADE—After spending $200 to be relieved of Blood Poison without any benefit, a few bottles of Swift's Specific worked a perfect cure. C. FORREST.

VIENNA, GA.—My little girl, aged six, and boy, aged four years, had scrofula in the worst aggravated shape. They were puny and sickly. To-day they are healthy and robust, all the result of taking S. S. S. JOE T. COLLIER.

LADY LAKE, SUMTER CO., FLA.—Your S. S. S. has proved a wonderful success in my case. The cancer on my face, no doubt, would have soon hurried me to my grave. I do think its wonderful, and has no equal. D. H. BYRD, Postmaster.

Why Is This Thus?

If the tariff on wool—thirty-six per cent—is "robbery," as the democrats claim, what is the tariff on sugar, which is eighty-two per cent?

If the tariff on wool is robbery, what is the tariff on rice, which is 100 per cent?

If the object of the Mills bill is to reduce the revenue by reducing the tariff, as the free traders assert, why not reduce the tariff on sugar, which produces $58,000,000, instead of removing altogether the tariff on wool, which produces only $5,000,000 revenue?

If the object of reducing the tariff is to lighten the farmer's burdens, as the democracy pretend, why not reduce it on sugar, which the farmer has to buy, instead of removing it from wool, which he raises to sell?

Is it possible that it is because wool is essentially a product of the north, while sugar and rice are grown solely at the south, that makes it "robbery" to protect the former thirty-six per cent, and honesty to protect the latter 100 per cent?

Worse than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas belt of this country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately this latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No ter if you have used this remedy be- will pay you to get a bottle and directions, or send for the pam- learn how to use it econom-

Years ago, when Thomas A. Edison was a telegraph operator in the office of the old Franklin company, on Wall street, New York, he was continually getting himself into trouble by perpetrating electrical pranks on his brother operators. The instruments in those days were placed on shelf like desks ranged along the walls of the operating room, and Edison's place was in a corner of the room. Here he concocted all his schemes for making life miserable to every one and everything about him.

The office seemed the rendezvous for all the cockroaches in the lower part of the city, and Edison hit on a novel plan to exterminate them one by one. He rigged up a wire along the wall, and then catching one of the insects put it to death in the short and painless fashion approved by Commodore Gerry. One by one the insects were "sparked out" of existence until finally Edison became known to the Franklin boys as "Cockroach Tom."

In the cloak room was a large tank generally filled with ice water, beside which hung a tin dipper on a nail in the wall. Edison connected this nail with a wire at the other end of which were 190 cells of Fuller battery, strong enough to make one think he had been struck by the paddle wheel of a Fall river steamer. The future "Wizard of Menlo" then placed a sign below the dipper requesting all to "please return this dipper." His request was heeded. The dipper was never taken down, but there were a dozen or more wrenched arms in the office in less than an hour.

All this time the youthful inventor was working on the quadruplex telegraph scheme which he afterward perfected, and which is now the principal system in use by the Western Union company.—New York Telegram.

Crowding Out the Needy.

"Another girl I know of, who graduated at Vassar, imbibed there so much energy and enthusiasm that she could not settle down to the life of a commonplace daughter of the household. She must work, she said, and she would teach. They live in a neighboring suburban city, where her father is prominently concerned in public school affairs, and it was, of course, easy for him to procure her an agreeable place. So she teaches, driven to her classroom every morning by a liveried coachman, while the white hands which so daintily wield the pointer at the blackboard sparkle with rings, any one of which exceeds in value the sum she earns as a teacher in a whole year.

"But think of the equally intelligent, efficient young woman she is putting aside. Somebody wants that place, not to occupy herself, but to make her daily bread.

"Why, only the other day mamma was called upon to interest herself in behalf of a young gentlewoman with an invalid father to support. She painted exquisitely, but found it impossible to dispose of her work. One prominent dealer in art bric-a-brac told her when she mentioned a price for the articles she offered him that but little more than covered the cost of the materials:'

"'Oh, I could not pay so much as that; they are worth it, no doubt, but I can get them cheaper. Plenty of fashionable women do this sort of thing, you know,' he went on, not without a certain pride in his voice, either, 'women who drive up here in their carriage, who work for the pleasure of it, and who spend the money I pay them right here in my shop for more materials.'

"Now, does that seem fair? Which is why I say," finished this fair champion of justice, logically repeating her opening proposition, "that there ought to be a society for the suppression or regulation of amateur industry."—New York Times.

New Method of "Swearing."

As a party of Scotch concert singers was traveling in Australia, the members of it were obliged to take an exceedingly difficult road, in order to follow their specified route north from Brisbane. Sometimes, during the hardest day's journey, they were obliged to walk up the long hills, urging along the horses, which accomplished about three yards at each pull. Finally, at the foot of a formidable ascent, the driver volunteered a piece of valuable information.

"Folks generally swear here," said he. "It makes the horses go better."

No doubt; but we could never think of —— The very thing! use the names of Scotch songs. We started up the hill.

"Jo-o-ohn Grumlie!" shouted one.

"Ye Banks and Bra-a-es!" shrieked another.

"Get up and Bar the Door—oh," yelled a third, frightening one of the leading horses, who sticks manfully into his collar. On we go.

"Oh, why left I my Ha-a-me!" takes us an immense distance.

"Castles in the Air!" gets the coach up about fifteen yards.

"We're a' Noddin'," delivered with impassioned fervor, makes a great difference in the speed. "My Heart's in the Highlands!" in despairing accents, sends up a slope, while "Tam Glen," "Ower the Hills and Far Awa-a-a!" in fierce, excited tones by the entire company brings us, hoarse, perspiring and exhausted, to the mountain's brow.—Youth's Companion.

The Envelope for Use.

Never use a square envelope. Few are the male offenders in this respect, but many, alas! the culprits of the gentler sex. A square envelope, large or small, but especially large, is anathema in the eyes of the postal clerk. Use an oblong envelope of a moderately large size—a government No. 4 1-2 or No. 5, corresponding nearly to the ordinary stationer's No. 6, is the best for general letter writing purposes and for small manuscripts. An envelope which the enclosure can just be squeezed into is an abomination to the sender, and particularly to the recipient when he attempts to return the letter to its envelope, and sees it break open the whole edge.—Horace London in The Writer.

Pipes for Cool Air.

It won't be ten years hence when all buildings piped for heat in the winter will be cooled in summer through the same pipes. If ice can be artificially frozen it should be no great trick to send down the temperature of a hall, opera house or room.—Detroit Free Press.

The Jots and Tittles.

A manuscript was submitted for examination the other day and was so peculiar as to be absolutely illegible. Nothing but the i dotting indicated which side was up and which was down. You see how important it is to give the eye all that belongs to it.—Syracuse Christian Advocate.

Too Strong to Resist.

Sick Man (to wife)—If I should die, would you marry again?

Wife (sobbing)—Oh, I think not, John; but your life is insured for $20,000, you know, and no doubt I should have very strong pressure to resist.—The Epoch.

S. K. Hodgkin of Everett, Mass., was drowned in Lake Winnipesaukie on the 30th ult., while boating.

There are fifty-two republicans in Exeter who voted for William Henry Harrison in 1840, including Gen. Marston, Rev. Jacob Chapman, Rev. Noah Hooper, Rev. Israel T. Otis, Hervey Kent and James W. Odlin.

The republicans of Derry Depot raised two campaign flags on the evening of July 28th.

Charles Ham, aged seventeen years, living in Thornton, this state was drowned July 29th, while trying to wade the Pemigewasset river.

Robert D. McCarten, a prominent citizen and a representative to the 1887 legislature from Lancaster, was killed by the accidental discharge of a revolver in the hands of James Alexander, July 27th.

The Unitarian grove meeting will be held at the Weirs from Friday, Aug. 3d, to Sunday, Aug. 5th, inclusive.

RAILROAD ITEMS.

A new platform has been laid in front of the Kittery Junction depot for nearly its entire length, and some grading up has been and is being done there, which is a great improvement.

The new Navy Yard (Kittery Foreside) station of the York Harbor & Beach railroad is very nearly finished, and the surroundings have been greatly improved by grading, etc. The building itself is a very handsome one, inside and out. The interior is finished wholly in whitewood, stained in different colors, the effect being very fine. The town is grading up the street in the vicinity, and the whole when completed will be creditable to railroad and town both.

J. P. Mansur was so badly injured in the freight yard at Concord on the 31st ult. while coupling cars, that he died in a few hours.

The contract for grading the Lake Shore railroad was on July 31st awarded to James K. Ryan & Co. of New York.

MARITIME NOTES.

Matthew Lorenzo and Alfred Lorenzo, brothers, of Gloucester, Mass., and belonging to the crew of the schooner Silver Dart of that port, are reported as having got astray from the vessel while tending trawls on the banks, and it is believed they are lost.

The new yacht Aphrodite, of Boston, while going out of Kennebunk river July 31st went on the rocks at the entrance, and at low water was high and dry. She is valued at $6,000.

Lawrence Bigelow's boat was in port last Friday from York harbor. She is a handsome new craft, twenty-two feet over all, built on Cape Cod; is a comfortable cruising vessel, a fine sea boat, and sails well. In making a berth at the rear of Sise's wharf, the young seamen at the helm, through not looking aloft, fouled her rigging with the rigging very readily, and was down again in a moment without soiling his white trowsers, much to the admiration of the river and wharf men who were looking on.

The steam yacht Ibis, having on board Gen. S. C. Lawrence, family and invited guests, touched at the Isles of Shoals on Sunday, on her way from Boston to Bar Harbor.

Mr. Starr's steam yacht Gypsey, which had new boilers placed in her by Boardman at Fernald's slip last week, is now lying off the premises of her owner at Kittery Point, ready for cruising. Machinists say her works are very fine.

DEMOCRATS ATTENTION.

"We believe in a government of the people, for the people, and by the people."—Abraham Lincoln.

All true democrats who believe in the principles of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson and Pierce, are requested to keep away from the so-called democratic caucuses now about to be held; not to vote at all at the approaching municipal election; and not to submit to the dictation of a one-man power contrary to all democratic principles. JACKSONIANS.

Mrs. Fred Pierce of Worcester, Mass., who, with her husband, had been on a spree for a week, was found dead in her house Sunday, July 29th, and four empty liquor bottles in the room told the story.

Abiah Cutler of Lowell, Mass., was shot July 29th by his hired man, George Shepard. Cutler's wounds are serious but not fatal.

Bruce Younger, a negro, was lynched last week at Meadeville, Va., for assulting a white women.

The President of Venezula and Secretary Bayard last week wired congratulation over the new cable between the two countries.

P. A. Stout of Pittsburg, Pa., who killed his son because the latter refused to bid him good by when leaving home, has been found guilty of murder in the second degree.

The Northern Pacific railroad company has been guaranteed a large sum to operate a system of roads in Manitoba.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the sympathetic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." MATRIMONIAL.

Rev. Lee Howard Fisher, pastor of the Universalist church, and Miss Mary Elizabeth Blaisdell, daughter of the late Uriah Blaisdell, were married in the church at noon on Tuesday, July 31st. The church was beautifully decorated with ferns and flowers in and around the chancel, including a triple arch of pond lilies and a marriage bell, beneath which the bridal pair stood during the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. E. H. Capen, D. D., president of Tufts college, assisted by Rev. Alfred Gooding, pastor of the Unitarian church. The bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her brother-in-law, Mr. Joseph H. Cullis of Waverly, Mass.; her dress was white surah, with lace veil, and she carried a bouquet of rosebuds. The bridesmaids were Miss Florence E. Dimick and Miss Clara Hanscom, Miss Alice Hanscom presiding at the organ; the ushers were Goodwin E. Philbrick, Will C. Pooler, Charles W. Gray and Charles P. Garvin of this city, and Rev. Mr. Barber of Waltham, Mass. All the Protestant clergymen in the city were present at the ceremony. As the newly-made husband and wife passed down the aisle on their way out of the church, two little girls, Marguerite Garrett and Ethel Vogler, preceded them with baskets of flowers, which they scattered in their path. Following the ceremony a reception was held in the vestry parlor, which was handsomely adorned with flowers and evergreen, and where throngs paid their respects to the pastor and his bride. The numerous wedding gifts included a case of silver table-ware from the Universalist parish. Mr. Fisher and wife left for the eastward by an afternoon train, and will be absent till September, when they will take up their residence in the parsonage on Daniel street.

Hon. Thomas Leavitt of Exeter, judge of probate for Rockingham county, was recently united in marriage with Miss Ella C. Brown of that town, and the couple have gone south on a bridal trip.

OBITUARY.

Dea. Arnold B. Hutchinson, who has just passed away at the ripe age of full four score, was born in Lyndeborough, this state. Upon coming to manhood he engaged in farming and milling operations in Sullivan county until 1840, when he removed to St. Johnsbury, Vt., there following the same pursuits. In 1869 he returned to his native state, settling in Greenland, where he resided three years, after which he came to live with his son in this city, where he died July 30th, leaving a wife, his most faithful partner for fifty-three years, and two children—a daughter, Mrs. N. Meloon, and a son, J. H. Hutchinson, both of this city.

BASE BALL.

The Portsmouth club came very near getting shut out entirely in their game with the Manchesters on the grounds of the latter, July 30th, the score by innings being as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Manchester	1	1	1	1	0	2	1	0	3	—10

Before the game commenced there was a 100-yards dash, followed by ball throwing and base running. Murray of the Portsmouths beat Scheffler of the Manchesters three feet in the first event. Clarke of Manchester took first prize for ball throwing, with 359 ft. 6 in.,—the best record yet made in the New England league,—and Coughlin of Portsmouth took second, with 356 ft. 2 in., there being four other competitors. In base running Canavan and Murray of Portsmouth divided first money, being tied on fifteen seconds each, and Ellis of Manchester took second, on 15 1-2 seconds.

The Portsmouth nine "razzle-dazzled" the Salems in great shape on Tuesday afternoon on the south end grounds, the score standing ten to nothing. Didn't Willis pitch a great game? Only two base hits off his delivery in nine innings, and those made in the last inning after two men were out. The rest of the team little Kittredge, the catcher, who took everything that came in his way, and there were several difficult fouls that he squeezed. The batting of the Portsmouths was the great feature, Canavan making a home run over the left-field; Willis three two-baggers, Daley two, and Murray one; and Leighton, Coughlan and Rudderham, singles. The double umpire system was tried, Bingham of the Salems and Ryan of the home team acting in that capacity, and it was unsatisfactory, the crowd jeering the umpires through most of the game. There was a fine attendance, a large proportion being ladies. Why not put Willis against the Manchesters next Saturday? The score:

Voters should bear in mind that in order to vote, their names must be upon the checklists of the wards they respectively reside in. The inspectors of checklists will be in session at the following places in the different wards on Friday next, Aug. 3d, from nine to twelve A. M. and from two to five P. M. each day, to correct the lists. Every legal voter should personally attend to the duty of seeing that his name is on the list of his ward, and if not there, that it be placed there.

The republicans of Portsmouth will caucus for a candidate for mayor at the court house next Saturday evening, from four o'clock to eight. Let every republican voter attend.

Children's 38-cent and 50-cent colored cotton hose marked down to twenty-five cents. Parasols all marked down. L. E. Staples, No. 7 Market street.

It is rumored that Hon. Daniel Marcy, who has done so much for the democratic party of Portsmouth and of New Hampshire for forty or fifty years past, is to be smoothed down by the douceur of a nomination for mayor. The bluff and genial old liner has had no influence whatever with the Cleveland administration, and now when the presidential election is considered to be very doubtful he is to be put up to be "bled." But what is to become of George? O. L. D.

The republicans of ward one will hold their caucus for the nomination of candidates to be supported at the coming municipal election, on Friday evening at eight o'clock, in the headquarters on Congress street. A full attendance is desired.

Alderman Boyston, who, contrary to the wishes of his constituents, has removed out of ward one into ward two, has served one year on the board very much to the satisfaction of his many friends, and thinks it very proper that he should be nominated for the same office from his new residence in a ward which he has aided to ornament and build up, at large expense. Voyons nous.

Mr. John A. Cornelius, the plumber, is at home in this city from York, where he has been engaged in the preparation of the water works of some of the seaside hotels. He reports that while he was there burglars attempted to get into the tent of the Indians encamped at the beach, and afterward tried to enter the Marshall house by climbing up on the portico, but in both instances were frightened away.

It is said that an elm tree was struck by lightning in a recent shower, near Owen E. Pettigrew's new barn in Kittery which was built to replace the one burned by lightning on the same spot last year. The old adage that "Lightning never strikes twice in the same place," like many an other old adage, is bosh; experience proves that a spot once visited by lightning is especially likely to be visited again, the same cause which operated to attract the first stroke operating to induce a second one. If it was said that lightning never burns the same barn, or kills the same man, twice, it would probably be correct.

To Save Life

Frequently requires prompt action. An hour's delay waiting for the doctor may be attended with serious consequences, especially in cases of Croup, Pneumonia, and other throat and lung troubles. Hence, no family should be without a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has proved itself, in thousands of cases, the best Emergency Medicine ever discovered. It gives prompt relief and prepares the way for a thorough cure, which is certain to be effected by its continued use.

S. H. Latimer, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ga., says: "I have found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a perfect cure for Croup in all cases. I have known the worst cases relieved in a very short time by its use; and I advise all families to use it in sudden emergencies, for coughs, croup, &c."

A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middletown, Tenn., says: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes R. Bragdon, of Palestine, Texas, "believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinance, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drank, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill.—a frequent cause of cholera mortis—, breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the tanner, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often dissuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

Price 25 cents per bottle.

BILIOUSNESS.

This very common complaint, which is caused by a dormant or inactive liver, can be cured in a short time by using Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, as can also the various diseases arising from inactive liver or kidneys. These organs, if inactive, will allow impure blood to enter the heart, causing tightness about that organ and palpitation.

She suffered thirty years.

MRS. DUDLEY CHANDLER, of Melrose, Mass., says: "I had suffered with Palpitation of the Heart more than thirty years before I found anything to give me essential relief. Last fall I tried Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, and, remarkable as it was, this Compound relieved me in two days, so that for several months afterwards I felt not the slightest touch of it, and am perfectly free from it now. Sometimes, before I took this Compound, the pulsations of my heart were so violent as to shake my whole body with rapid agitations, and at times I fainted and became entirely insensible. Now I am perfectly free from all this suffering. Consequently I can most sincerely and earnestly recommend this Compound to all like sufferers, as pre-eminently the best medicine I ever knew for Palpitation of the Heart."

This Compound is purely Vegetable, and strengthens and builds up the system while it eradicates disease.

Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

conduit which he thinks solves the problem of underground electric wires. Plates of glass are grooved on the upper surface, and the wires are laid in the grooves and cemented there with pitch. Then other plates of glass are laid over the first, and wires put upon them in the same way. When all the wires are laid the whole is enclosed in a wooden box and embedded in cement.—New York Sun.

CHILDREN IN SUMMER.

Some Hints of Great Value to Anxious Parents—A Doctor's Advice.

Right here a word of advice can be given which, if heeded, may save many of these children from the tortures of sickness and the sadness of death. True, so long as it is necessary for some people to live in houses where pure air is almost unknown the rate of infant mortality will be abnormally high, yet a little knowledge and a little care on the part of those who have charge of children will greatly reduce it. What follows may claim the attention of rich as well as poor, for riches do not always bring wisdom, and the children of well to do parents are frequently the victims of the carelessness and ignorance of mothers.

A talk with Dr. Nagle, of the health department, reveals the fact that during the hot weather about one hundred infants—that is, children under 5 years—die in New York city every day. On the average over one-third of this great mortality is due to diseases resulting from disturbances of the digestive organs. One hundred little ones dying every day! And yet many of these little lives could be saved and many households could be spared the sorrow of witnessing the painful struggle of the babes for life.

Three important things in connection with the care of children should always be remembered—cleanliness, pure air and proper feeding. Much injury is done children by overfeeding them. In the first month or so of a child's life frequent feeding is necessary. Its stomach is incapable of hard work, and that organ must gradually become accustomed to the duties nature intended it to perform. For this reason small quantities of food are taken at a time, and the feeding must occur at short intervals. At first let the intervals be only two or three hours long. At six months the child should be fed not oftener than five times a day. A child will often seem hungry when a little water will satisfy it. Give pure water or barley water. Do not accustom your child to feeding during the night. This may easily be avoided by beginning rightly. If the child awakes and cries, give only water. It will soon go to sleep again, and if it is not given food it will certainly learn not to expect it. This plan is better for the child, and it saves the mother and every one else about the house a deal of trouble.

To insure proper cleanliness infants should be bathed twice a day and oftener in hot weather. A child always feels better after a bath in cool water. Baby should love its bath. If it does not, the fault lies with those who administer it. Do not splash the water about or get the soap in baby's eyes. Nor should one give the bath when the child is hungry. The soothing effect of the bath upon the child is noticeable. Quiet, healthful, refreshing sleep is often the result. Indeed, a cool bath at night is better than a narcotic. Sleeplessness in the child means worry and exhaustion to the mother, and this reacts upon the child by affecting both the quality and quantity of her milk. The bath, too, has a marked effect in preventing bowel complaint.

In this connection a hint may be given on the clothing of infants. They should be neither overdressed nor underdressed. The clothing should not be so heavy as to cause discomfort nor so light as to permit their catching cold. In our changeable climate, where cold nights often succeed warm days and sudden changes are liable to occur in a few hours, it is difficult to have the clothing always just right. Matters will be much simplified by using a flannel band around the abdominal region, covering the digestive organs. This will ward off sudden chills and frequently be the means of preventing illness. The band should be made to fit evenly and snugly, and should be worn by all children under 4 years of age at all times. In a circular which the health department has issued the following advice on summer complaint is given:

"It comes from over feeding, and hot and foul air. Keep doors and windows open. Wash your well children with cool water twice a day, or oftener in the hot season. Never neglect loosenss of the bowels in an infant. Consult the family or dispensary physician at once, and he will give you rules about what it should take and how it should be nursed. Keep your rooms as cool as possible, have them well ventilated, and do not allow any bad smell to come from sinks, privies, garbage boxes, or gutters about the house where you live. Where an infant is cross and irritable in the hot weather, a trip on the water will do it a great deal of good (ferryboat or steamboat), and may prevent cholera infantum."

With the first appearance of teeth in a child some food other than milk becomes necessary. Give it a crust of bread to exercise upon, and let it occasionally suck a piece of rare beef. Toward the close of the first year the teeth should be coming regularly. A failure in this regard will usually mean that something is wrong. The food may not be as nutritious as necessary, or there may be some defect of digestion. The child's digestion frequently shows signs of weakness after an attack of cholera infantum, and sometimes when there has been no positive sickness. The child does not gain in weight and strength as it should, the color is pale and the bones show signs of imperfect development. This is seen in their tendency to bend in the well known "bow legs." Under these circumstances the head, too, will assume a decidedly square appearance. Well, these symptoms are well marked. They point to the affection known as rickets, which is always due to bad nutrition, resulting from improper surroundings. The diet must be made richer in bone forming material. The child must also have plenty of exercise and pure air and sunlight. Some medicine is usually needed, and when the condition described manifests itself the parents should consult a physician before the malady has gone so far as to produce malformations.

The acute diseases which afflict children in summer are, as a rule, short in their course. What is a slight sickness today may turn out a fatal one to-morrow. For this reason no disturbance of a child's digestion should be neglected. A physician should be consulted as soon as possible.—William A. Graham, M. D., in New York World.

Of the professional pugilistic, the kidneys are small but active in a state of health. Their secretion contains impurities productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy, if allowed to remain. When they are inactive, the blood becomes choked with animal debris capable of destroying life. To promote their activity when sluggish with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is not only to guard against the diseases mentioned, but to prevent the fatty degeneration and ultimate destruction of the organs by those exceedingly dangerous maladies—Bright's disease and diabetes. Activity of the bladder also insures it against the formation of gravel, which it sometimes requires one of the most dangerous and painful operations in surgery to remove. Gravel, moreover, is a most agonizing complaint. The Bitters further commend themselves by remedying constipation, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and nervousness, and nullify influences productive of malarial disease.

THE PILE WORM'S HABITS.

Its Remarkable Ravages in Riddling Timber—An Importation.

Just at high water mark and extending a foot below it, I saw the stanchest timbers wasted away until I could have spanned their circumference with my hand. The constant friction of the waves alone could not have done this. It was the work of that dread enemy of wharf owners and ship masters, the teredo navalis. Now, I could account for the sinking in of the floor of the dock in many places. The worm would attack a pile and, with his numberless comrades, eat and eat away the wood until it was absolutely honeycombed. The waves would then complete the work. The point of attack chosen by these bivalvular pests, in a pile, is from about fifteen inches below up to high water mark. This generally breaks the timber at about midway between the wharf and the surface of the earth.

Imagine a stout pine trunk, of a diameter of a foot and a half, completely filled with long, tortuous channels varying from one-quarter to three-quarters of an inch, and running from outer edge to outer edge. Now, as thin as is this sheet upon which I write these lines, as thin as the transparent division against which the golden honey rests in the waxen comb, so thin are the walls between each of the fatal channels which mark the passage and progress of the worm through the doomed timber. As singular as it may seem, they never break through, they never disturb each other or trespass upon each other's territory. There may be a thousand of them in a single pile, but no instance has yet been found in which one of these passageways intersected another or trenched upon another's right of way. They may all be boring at once—some up, some down, some internally, some obliquely—and they may make their division walls as thin as it pleases them, but there is never an infraction of this law, of absolute inviolability of each individual's right of way. It will easily be apprehended, therefore, how quickly a timber thus riddled will be worn away by the constant attrition of the tides, until it finally breaks, and brings with it in its fall the beam above, of which it was the support.

A study of the history and habits of this singular worm will be found neither uninteresting nor unprofitable. Its habitat was originally in the tropic seas, but being carried in the timbers of vessels into North American and European waters, it has become the terror and dread of wharfmen and captains of unsheathed sailing craft along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and in the harbors of numbers of Mediterranean cities. According to the classification of Linnæus, this bivalve belongs to the family of pholladæ, and genus teredo, so called from their habit of destroying ship or other timber. The shell is equal valved, and in form it is short, thick and round and widely open in front and rear. This shell is situated at the inner end of a tube, somewhat cylindrical in shape, and either straight or crooked, as the case may be; this tube being open at each end in the full grown specimens, and lined or coated with a white, chalky paste or substance, which seems to be its digestive apparatus.

The weapon of the teredo is not teeth, as might be supposed. This singular animal has still another peculiarity, dependent, however, upon the one last mentioned, for since its instrument is its foot, so it feeds itself not from the mouth, but from the foot itself. The valves above noted are simply appendages of the foot. In fact, if a teredo should have his foot amputated he would in a most vital sense "lose his grip." In the center of the circular opening of the valves the foot is protruded, like the blade concealed in a spring cane, and the entire arrangement constitutes a boring machine of power inconceivable in so small an object. But the strength of this machine becomes apparent when upon a closer examination one notes the strong rubber like ridges of the valves, which can contract with great force, and the comparatively immense size of the great abductor muscle which enables the teredo to use its sharp foot with the ease of an auger passing through the softest pine.

This worm attains often a great length, but it is usually from one foot to a yard long, its size depending on the length of time it has been in the wood and frequently on the size of the wood itself. It is provided with two respiratory tubes, each of which has a siphon attached to a calcareous, flattened, triangular plate on the outside of the body. It has two heads—if such they can be called—each attached to the extremity of a tube much smaller than the main trunk, and which are each (the small tubes) about six inches long; or, in other words, the main body splits into two small tubes at about a foot or six inches from where the head is in a teredo, and where the tail would be in a snake. This worm is oviparious, and when the young are born (with a smooth shell) they swim around by means of a vibratile cilia; sometimes creeping with the foot until old enough to begin work on a piece of wood. A good, nice, new pile having been selected, they fasten themselves to the wood by means of the suction apparatus in their heads, strike in with their foot and bore inwardly until only the head remains outside. Then they fasten themselves to the opening, flush with its very edge, just as a clerk will fasten sheets of paper together by turning over the sides of a brass clamp, and henceforward their sole aim, object and ambition in life is to grow, bore and make sawdust. Small when they enter, they could no more creep backward out of their original hole after feasting a month or two on a rich pine log than a camel could go through the eye of a needle.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Asteroids as Comets.

Professor Daniel Kirkwood points out that seven of the twenty known comets of short period have disappeared, either by breaking into fragments, like Bila's comet, or by the transformation of the orbit by the influence of Jupiter, as in the case of Lexell's comet. He had already given reasons for thinking that two of the short period comets were asteroids drawn from their orbits by Jupiter's attraction, and he now advances evidence tending to show that the entire twenty were originally small planets.—Arkansaw Traveler.

How Margarine Is Made.

Animal fat or grease is allowed to stand for some time at about 80 degs. Fahrenheit, when most of the stearine separates out; pressure removes the adherent oleine, and the stearine is then obtained in a solid concrete form. The oleine is next mixed with cotton seed oil, purified with fuller's earth, etc., arachis oil, nut oil, cocoanut oil, etc., at about 80 degs. Fahrenheit; the mixture is then churned with milk for some time, when it is allowed to flow in a gentle stream into ice cold water, where it permanently solidifies. It is then milled or ground, and this operation removes excess of milk and insures perfect blending; at the same time a small quantity of salt is added, when we obtain the finished article. The coloring matter and butter, if required, are blended in during this part of the operation. This is in principle the process of margarine manufacture. In separating stearine from oleine in animal fats the soft fats or greases are used in preference to the hard fats or tallow. Beef fat is always used, as being more palatable. The stearine is sometimes employed for candle or soap making; not infrequently it is mixed with other fats and passed off as lard; but this mixture would reveal an enormous proportion of stearine, by being harder and not so easily fusible as lard. To get over this, cotton oil is added to make the mixture more closely approach the nature and properties of lard.

A short time ago, when experimenting on margarine, Mr. T. Bruce Warren found, after removing a large quantity of cotton oil, that a quantity of cocoanut oil was present. He was completely surprised at this result, for the smell of cocoanut oil is so unmistakable. He found that cotton seed oil completely masks the smell and flavors of this oil. Many may ask why, above all others, should this have been selected for margarine? In the first place, being a concrete oil or fat, it is well adapted for such a purpose; provided its smell and flavor could be concealed. In the second place, it approaches more closely than any other vegetable or animal fat to the composition of genuine dairy butter.—Diet and Hygiene.

Life of a Priest in Russia.

Not only are the priests subjected to great hardships and privations, but they are the butt of all the wits and humorists of the empire. Half the jokes in the funny papers are about them, and their lives suggest half the proverbs of the country. "As poor as a priest," "As stupid as a priest," "As wretched as a priest," "As hungry as a priest," etc., are familiar expressions. Under the circumstances little better can be expected of them.

The influence of the priests over the people is very great. They are the representatives of the church, in which the peasant devoutly believes. They baptize his children, visit him when he is sick, marry him, bury him and say masses for the repose of his soul. He is with them always, like the poor, and if he is a man of any conscience or ability he cannot but wield an immense power. But, still further than this, the entire system of political, social and domestic economy in Russia is based upon the doctrine of autocracy. As the czar is the autocrat of all the Russias, as the bishop is the autocrat of his diocese, so is the priest the pope of the parish, the autocrat of the village in which he ministers. That is about all the satisfaction he gets.—William Eleroy Curtis.

Work Multiplied Dangers.

"You were in the war, then, Capt. McKillem?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am; yes, ma'am; fought all throught it."

"Is there not," she said, hesitatingly, "a great deal of danger in a battle?"

"Well, yes," the captain replied reflectively, "there is, there is. So many men standing around, you know, and so careless handling of firearms as is almost sure to occur during a battle, makes it really very unsafe."

Miss Lollipop shuddered, and then resumed:

"Are not some people severely injured at times?"

"Yes," the captain said, "they are. I once had a friend who was hurt so badly that he couldn't leave his room for several days."

And then she said there ought to be a law against them, and he said he believed the legislature of Iowa contemplated passing some such law at its next session.

And she said that she was glad.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Not Very Well Acquainted.

A certain public official, who will be immediately recognized when it is stated that he is a remarkably handsome gentleman, approaching middle age, and that he has brown eyes and a very full black beard just sufficiently sprinkled with gray to suggest pepper and salt, had a pleasant surprise party at his house on Valentine's day. It was tendered to the recipient by only one person, a young gentleman of extremely immature age, whose relationship to the middle aged gentleman in question is very close. The latter was greatly pleased. He had been for years longing for just such a surprise party. He kissed the new arrival with much fervor and led in his little daughter, aged 3 years, to join in the performance. The countenance of the new arrival was somewhat florid. The little lady looked at him and sized up her contract with many misgivings. Finally she said, timidly: "I don't want to kiss him, papa. He looks so hot, and I don't know him very well."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Blind Man and the Milk.

One blind from birth asked a man who could see: "What color is milk?" The man who could see replied: "The color of milk is like white paper." The blind man asked: "This color, then, rustles in the hands like paper?" The man who could see replied: "No; it is white, like white flour." The blind man asked: "Then it is soft and pliable, like flour, is it?" The man who could see replied: "No; it is simply white, like a rabbit." The blind man asked: "Then it is downy and soft, like a rabbit?" The man who could see replied: "No; white is a color exactly like snow." The blind man asked: "Then it is cold, like snow, is it?" And in spite of all the comparisons which the man who could see made still the blind man was wholly unable to comprehend what the color of milk really was.—The Long Exile.—Tolstoi.

TRADE MARK S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD

An Important Announcement

About six weeks ago, while at business, I was suddenly attacked with excruciating pains in my feet, knees and hands. So severe the attack that I took my bed immediately, and in two or three days my joints were swollen to almost double their natural size, and sleep was driven from me. After suffering the most excruciating pain for a week, using liniments and various other remedies, a friend who sympathized with my helpless condition, said to me:

"Why don't you get Swift's Specific and use it. I will guarantee a cure, and if it does not the medicine shall cost you nothing."

I at once secured the S. S. S., and after using it the first day, had a quiet night and refreshing sleep. In a week I felt greatly benefitted. In three weeks I could sit up and walk about the room, and after using six bottles I was out and able to go to business. Since then I have been regularly at my post of duty, and stand on my feet from nine to ten hours a day, and am entirely free from pain. These are the plain and simple facts in my case, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries relative thereto, either in person or by mail. THOMAS MARILLIER, 11 W. 19th street, New York City.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—I have warded off a severe attack of rheumatism by a timely resort to Swift's Specific. In all cases where a permanent relief is sought this medicine commends itself for a constitutional treatment that thoroughly eradicates the seeds of disease from the system. Rev. W. F. HARRISON, D. D.

NEW YORK, 51 7TH AVE.—After spending $200 to be relieved of Blood Poison without any benefit, a few bottles of Swift's Specific worked a perfect cure. C. FORTEA.

LADY LAKE, SUMTER CO., FLA.—Your S. S. S. has proved a wonderful success in my case. The cancer on my face, no doubt, would have soon hurried me to my grave. I do think it is wonderful, and has no equal.

Defenders of American Industry.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

Our manufactures require the systematic and fostering care of the government. * * Equally important it is to provide at home a market for our raw materials.—James Monroe.

With President Cleveland, Great Britain knows where she is.—Glasgow Herald.

The Soldiers' Friend.

Five thousand more original pensions were granted during the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1888, than ever before in any one year. And yet the republicans would make us believe that the administration is inimical to the soldier.—Biddeford Standard.

The statement of our democratic contemporary to the eastward is correct, as a matter of statistics; and yet it will not deceive a man of those for whom it is intended, the veterans of the late war, into believing that Grover Cleveland, who has not only expended a good part of his time as president in vetoing special pension bills, but has evidently enjoyed making his veto messages the vehicle of cheap wit and insulting slurs upon the applicants for pensions, is a friend of the soldier.

These men are well aware that the increase in original pensions granted is due to the fact that Congress passed, and President Cleveland signed, a bill giving a pension to every soldier who served in the Mexican war, whether such soldier was in need of aid or not. They also know that the reason why Mr. Cleveland, who vetoed the dependent pension bill, a measure which only proposed to give pensions to union soldiers of the late war who were in absolute need, was so ready to sign the Mexican pension bill, was that the great majority of pensions under the latter bill would go to the southern states, and the larger part of them to men who fought for the confederacy, as was illustrated by the fact that the first pension granted under it was to Cerro Gordo Williams, a wealthy man and gallant confederate brigadier.

London Truth reports great distress among the working classes in Venice, owing to miserable wages, and cites the following: "Skilled tradesmen, who work hard for twelve hours a day six days in the week, can only earn from 9s. 6d. to 14s. per week. Clever wood cutters average 22s. per week; clerks in private employment get 5s. to 10s.; those in public offices 10s. to 20s.; and even those in the higher posts get only 25s. Women engaged in lace and bead work, if industrious, earn 4s. 6d. to 6s. The wages of agricultual laborers in the provinces average 3s. to 4s. 9d. a week." This is the style of wages which the "tariff reform" democracy propose to bring American workingmen in competition with.

The destruction of the alligators is destroying the streams and ponds of Florida. When alligators occupy a pond of water they always keep the mud pushed up on the banks, and even when large herds of cattle stamp the banks down, the alligators immediately repair the damage. But now they are disappearing before man's butchery, the ponds are fast filling up, and the cattle find no water where once it was abundant.

Allspice Is Well Named.

"Oh, no; allspice is not a mixture of a number of spices, but is a simple product itself," said a wholesale grocer. "The proper name for it is pimento, but as it combines the flavor of cinnamon, cloves, mace and nutmegs, it generally goes by the name of allspice. Pimento trees are natives of South America and the West India islands. The bulk of the pimento of commerce comes from Jamaica. Large groves of the spice trees grow on the hillsides of the islands, and thrive without cultivation. The leaves of the tree are bright green and glossy. When bruised they give off a spicy odor. The flowers grow in dense clusters. The fruit is a small, aromatic berry the size of a small pea. If permitted to ripen they become pulpy and lose some of their pungency. They are therefore gathered while green, and dried in the sun on rough platforms. When well cured they are packed for shipment in large bags holding from 160 to 180 pounds. The growers seldom get more than four cents a pound for the dried berries. The business does not afford a livelihood, and most growers feed horses and cattle on the rich pasture in the pimento groves.

"The value of the crop has increased from $180,000 in 1874 to $700,000 in 1887. The spice is shipped to this city and to London, about half going to each place. It is received in the berry and ground between revolving stones. It is then put up in tin cans, and is no longer known as pimento, but is the allspice of commerce."—New York Mail and Express.

Attractions of One of the Azores.

At San Miguel the first real disappointment came in shape of the announcement that the teamer would not stay long enough to go to the Furnas. The Furnas has, it is claimed, the most wonderful hot springs in the world. You can sit with one foot in a hot sulphur spring and have the other in hot iron, while you drink soda water from a well in front and brandy punch from another at your back. There are also several streams running through the place where boiled trout can be easily caught, and if this is all strictly true, there is no question but the Furnas has yet to be developed as a winter resort. Being compelled to miss this, we tried to drown sorrow in the native pineapples, and my impression is that I shall try to have some more sorrow to drown next time I go to the place. If the pineapples of San Miguel were any better, a man would go insane when he ate his first one. The pineapples we have in America are like grapeshot compared with these.—Cor. Boston Transcript.

The Month for Suicides.

"March is pre-eminently the month for suicides," said a well known physician. "An assertion to which statistics and, in fact, the horrible record of the last few days will amply bear witness. Of course, it is a well recognized theory that such crimes assume the form of an epidemic on slight provocation, but it still remains susceptible of demonstration that the windy month overtops all others in swelling the list of self-murders. My theory is that the vital forces have had such a draft upon them during the severe winter months that the system is so run down at this season of the year that despondency ensues on the slightest provocation, and then comes the end. I have not worked this out as thoroughly as I should like, and for the present shall refrain from elaborating my views."—Chicago Tribune.

A Priest Wearing Whiskers.

Dr. James G. Hyndman, the throat specialist of the Ohio Medical college, tells how the only Catholic priest in America who wears a beard came to let his whiskers to grow. The priest, whose pastoral duties are performed in Cincinnati, O., is subject to throat troubles. On the advice of Dr. Hyndman he let his beard grow and had no further inflammation in his throat. His superiors, however, objected to the innovation, and the priest was obliged to go to Rome to obtain permission to wear whiskers. He took with him a full account of his case from Dr. Hyndman's pen, and the church authorities at Rome at once granted him the permission desired.—New York World.

Burned by Electricity.

George Bielich was trying to make a large electric lamp burn the other night in Virginia, Nev., standing on a step ladder to reach it. He took hold of the lamp with one hand to balance himself and then accidentally touched the other side of the lamp. Instantly he was drawn off his feet, and curled and writhed like a snake as the electric current went through him. Finally one of the wires broke, and he fell to the floor unconscious. He soon recovered, but his hands were seared and blackened.—New York Sun.

To Perforate Earthenware.

A method which is said to be very satisfactory is recommended by Professor Stuart as follows: Instead of a drill, a soft copper rod or pipe is used in the lathe, it being fed with a mixture of powdered emery and linseed oil. The emery is embedded in the copper by the friction, and cuts right through the hardest material in a very short time.—Scientific American.

Who Settled Kentucky.

Col. T. W. Bullitt, of Louisville, says that it was not Daniel Boone who made the pioneer settlement in Kentucky, but an ancestor of his own named Walker. In proof of this assertion he shows a hatchet with which the said Mr. Walker blazed a path through the trackless woods in 1749.—Chicago Herald.

Can Do Nothing Else.

Russell Sage says he keeps on at stock dealing because he does not know what else to do. He thinks New York superior to Paris, and says Broadway is good enough for him, and adds: "I'd rather stay at 71 Broadway and guess on the prices of things than be anywhere else in the world."—New York World.

Effective Pulpit Work.

For effective pulpit work a rested brain is the best of all immediate preparations. Had I to choose between a manuscript with a weary head on my shoulders, and a fresh head—not a new one, of course—and no manuscript, I would select the head.—George C. Lorimer in The Writer.

Cure for Epilepsy.

In certain parts of Scotland the hard headed Scotchman drinks from the skull of a suicide for the cure of epilepsy. To make assurance doubly sure, it is directed to pulverize a portion of the skull and swallow it.—New York Sun.

Habit of Silence.

A good habit for some people to cultivate is the habit of silence. Under some conditions a man can make more noise in the world by keeping his mouth shut than any other way.—New York Graphic.

In Russia a leap year superstition is that if "St. Cassian (Feb. 29) look on a cow it will wither."

AFFAIRS IN KITTERY.

KITTERY POINT, ME., July 30th.

The democratic campaign flag has been flying here about two weeks.

Charlie Emery, son of Mr. Noah Emery of Molly Miles' avenue, is sick in Brockton, Mass.

Mr. Wm. C. Williams, first assistant lightkeeper at Boon island, came in last Wednesday with some fish; his daughter Mabel came in the day before, and will stop about two weeks. Mr. Williams says there have been many visitors at the island this season, but it has been too rough to land most of the time. The steam yacht Iris was off there on the 4th of July with a large party accustomed to pass the 4th there, but it was so rough they could not land, so they went to the Isles of Shoals.

The schooner Grace K. Green arrived in Boston last Thursday night. Capt. Seaward, his wife and little boy, and Mr. Lorenzo Fletcher, came home Friday. Mrs. Seaward has been with her husband two trips, and enjoyed them very much.

Chas. Mills, son of Skipper Mills, is at work at Mr. McClure's, Gerrish's island.

The republicans of this place have erected a set of flag poles near Mr. J. E. Frisbee's store, and a campaign flag was thrown to the breeze on the 29th.

The dredging machine Cambridge, of Boston, arrived here last Thursday from Portland, where it has been at work since April, and is dredging a channel to the fish pier, fifteen feet wide and four feet deep at low water.

Mr. Frank Riley of the Norton road is one of our most enterprising men; he may be seen every morning wending his way to the hotel Park Field with his team loaded with milk, cream, potatoes, peas, beans, etc., of his own raising.

Mrs. Frank Warden and family arrived home last Saturday from Boston and vicinity, where they have been passing a few weeks.

Mrs. Samuel Hodges of South Berwick, Me., formerly Miss Ida Perry of this place, passed the Sabbath with her parents.

There was a very good attendance at the Christian chapel last Sunday; the pastor, Rev. E. R. Phillips, preached an excellent sermon.

The Monthly Union Bethel meeting was held at the Freewill Baptist church last Sunday evening. The services, conducted by the pastor, Rev. S. Wakely, assisted by Rev. E. R. Phillips, were very interesting and largely attended.

Capt. Seaward, accompanied by his daughter Violet, and Mr. Fletcher, his mate, left here Monday morning to join his vessel in Boston.

Mr Chas. W. Raynes arrived here last Sunday, coming in a team from Boston.

Capt. William Patch of the steamer Pinafore, Isles of Shoals, made a flying visit to his family Sunday evening.

The schooner yacht Gitana arrived in the lower harbor Tuesday forenoon.

A team advertising the "Good Will soap" attracted considerable attention here Tuesday afternoon. Attached to a covered wagon were two horses, and on each was a blanket, on top of which was a dog perched beneath a colored parasol. They are eighty-three guests at the hotel Pepperrell. UNCLE MOSES.

HAMPTON JOTTINGS.

HAMPTON, July 30th.

There are three denominations in town which hold an afternoon Service; the Congregationalists do not.

Yesterday all sorts of teams with occupants were hurrying by, all desiring to the fresh sea breeze; It is said a large numbar dined at Cutler's.

This morning the surf was so high no fisherman ventured out. Of late cod fish have been caught weighing from forty to sixty lbs; several have been carried to Exeter, No mackerel here this season.

The Lane monument will be set about the middle of August.

Several distinguished guests are at the Union house from large cities in Massachusetts, one couple from London, and quite a number from Newburyport, the city once noted for its fine-looking ladies.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Clark took place last Saturday afternoon from her mother's residence, where she has been suffering from nervous prostration for three years past. Her husband is the son of Judge Clark of Manchester. She was a true lady, beloved by many, but the death of her two children caused the dread disease, and she has gone. In this immediate neighborhood six deaths have occurred within a few months, all of females.

We read that the sunsets in Italy are more lovely than in any part of the whole world. Those of last week were very beautiful here, and especially that of last evening, which with the rainbow would have been a fine scene for an artist. ——.

A man giving his name as Charles H. Sullivan, his age as twenty-four years and his residence as Dover, N. H., was found hidden under the counter in a Chelsea, Mass., paint shop, on the night of the 31st ult., having in his possession a canvas bag containing forty-five gold and silver watches and thirty Waterbury watches. It is said he is one of a great gang of thieves recently engaged in operating at Revere beach.

Among the patents issued to inventors during the week ending July 31st were two to Charles F. West of Concord for train signalling apparatus, and one to Orlando J. Bagley of Great Falls for ash sifter.

The firm of Doty & McFarlan, manufacturers of surface coated paper at Brooklyn, N. Y., supported Cleveland four years ago. They have seen the error of their ways, and a handsome Harrison and Morton and protection banner has been flung to the breeze from the top of their factory. The firm employs about 180 hands, and the flag raising was all the work of the employes.

It is said that President Cleveland has given the assurance that he will sign the river and harbor bill.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the sympathetic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." ANOTHER MAIL CARRIER.

Postmaster Gerrish on Wednesday, August 1st, appointed as mail carrier Mr. William Kennedy, who has at different times during the past year acted as substitute mail carrier on all the routes in the city during the absence of the regular carriers. Mr. Kennedy's route takes in the central or business portion of the city, and he went on duty at once. His appointment does not displace any of the old carriers, this city being allotted an additional carrier out of the 1600 new ones provided for by the post-office appropriation bill for 1888-89. We are not personally acquainted with the new appointee, but if he is half as good a man as his father, the late William Kennedy, he will do his duty to the satisfaction of the public, and we are glad he has the place.

EXCURSION RATES.

The fare to the Shoals and back on Sunday by the steamer Oceanic is reduced to fifty cents for the round trip. The boat leaves Appledore wharf at 10:50 A. M., and arrives at the islands at noon, starting on her return at 2:30 P. M. This arrangement affords an opportunity of enjoying a most delightful ocean trip at excursion rates, passing two hours or more at the islands, and arriving back in time for church services in the evening.

PERSONAL.

Miss Mary L. Varrell of State steeet is passing a few weeks at Annisquam, Mass.

Mr. George E. Damon and Miss Mary Bills, of Boston, are visiting Mr. Damon's parents, Mr. George W. Damon and wife of Kittery.

Judge Henry Vennard, of New Orleans, is visiting at Mrs. Andrew B. Vennard's on Richards avenue.

Constructor John F. Hanscom, U. S. N., has bought the George Williams place at Kittery Lower Foreside, near the Austin place, and his family are now there for the summer.

Second Assistant Engineer Alexander Dennett of Kittery, of the revenue marine service, has been granted fifteen days extension of leave.

BASE BALL.

The Electrics answer the Summer Boarders thus: "Put up your money and talk afterward."

At Salem, Wednesday, Salem 9, Portsmouth 4.

MUCH CONCERT.

A gentleman of mature years living at Kittery Foreside recently took to him a wife, as was his legal and moral right to do, if he so saw fit, and the lady consented. One night this week he was serenaded with more vigor than melody by a band of boys and young men equipped with tin pans and iron spoons, fog horns, wash boilers, and whatever else could be utilized in making a racket, the din, which is said to have eclipsed anything previously heard in Kittery since the noble red man ceased giving his warwhoop chorus in that town, being kept up until day break, when the concert ceased and the musicians departed. A heavy four-wheeled ox-cart, with a hayrack on top, was placed close alongside the front of the house during the night, and left there, blockading the front door. Although the parties for whose benefit the concert was gotten up were allowed to enjoy it without charge, the gentleman was displeased, and it was on Wednesday, the 1st inst., reported that warrants had been issued for the arrest of nine of the leading performers.

There was a lively row on Noble's island about 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening, the 1st inst., between a middle-aged man and two younger ones, one of the latter being a son of the elder man. It was reported that the young men were on a spree, and the father wished to get his son away from his companion, but the two made common cause, and together were too much for the old man. The parties to the disgraceful affair, which caused quite a crowd to gather, belong in Kittery.

A new ruling of the post office department provides that postal cards that are uncalled for will be returned to the writer at the end of thirty days, and that advertised letters will be held but two weeks, instead of four, before being sent to the dead letter office.

The democrats of Kittery Foreside were to have had a flag-raising on Monday evening of this week, but when the appointed time arrived it was found that there were not enough of the faithful on hand to raise the poles, and the "rally" was postponed to later in the week. It is alleged that two of the most influential leaders of the local democracy of late years, who have to a great extent "run things" since the Cleveland administration came in, are now with their followings holding entirely aloof, which throws the leadership of the Foreside democracy upon Mr. Samuel Augustus Jackson.

Slavin & Johnson's Minstrels will be at Music hall on Wednesday evening, Aug. 8th.

MARITIME NOTES.

Jos. H. Jameson received on the 1st inst. a swordfish weighing 565 pounds, taken southeast of the Shoals.

A party of Great Falls business men came by rail to this city on the 1st inst., and went down river by steamer Undine on a fishing excursion.

Steamer Minnecola arrived at this port on the 1st inst. from Haverhill, Mass., with about fifty passengers, who rambled around town until the boat started on her return in the afternoon, and were much pleased with their trip and visit. The steamer left Haverhill with about 250 passengers, 150 of whom stopped at Black Rocks, at the mouth of the Merrimac, fifty more landing at Newcastle to visit Fort Constitution. The captain of the boat is a good pilot for this river, having for some time sailed out of this port on the fishing schooner Sarah E. Babson.

The suit of the Canadian government against the Portland fishing schooner Ella M. Doughty, and also the suits in the came connection against Captain Doughty of that vessel, were all discontinued at Halifax on the 27th ult. All bonds given in the case are surrendered to the owners of the vessel, and all moneys deposited to cover fines and for all other matters will immediately be returned to them.

Two fishermen named Baugey and Whitmore, belonging to the Gloucester schooner Sarah E. Lee, lost their vessel in a fog while tending trawls 180 miles southwest of St. Pierre, and after being out five nights and four days without food or water, arrived at St. Pierre.

Edward Carrigan and Peter Mason, belonging to a Gloucester fishing vessel, lost the vessel on Grand bank, and after being a day and night in their dory without water or food were picked up by another schooner and landed at St. Pierre.

Children's 38-cent and 50-cent colored cotton hose marked down to twenty-five cents. Parasols all marked down. L. E. Staples, No. 7 Market street.

Pears' Soap secures a fine complexion.

Mayor Hewitt of New York on the 31st ult. appointed the new aqueduct commission as follows: General James C. Duane, U. S. A., retired, late chief of the United States engineers corps, (democrat;) Walter Howe, ex-member of the legislature, (independent;) John J. Tucker, an extensive contractor and builder, (republican;) Francis M. Scott, present assistant corporation counsel of New York city (democrat.) Gen. Duane was for many years engineer of the first lighthouse district, extending from Eastport, Me., to Hampton river, and also engineer in charge of river and harbor improvements and fortifications in Maine and New Hampshire. The aqueduct commission which has just been kicked out for corruption and malfeasance in office—which is a mild term to designate wholesale stealing—is the same that Civil Engineer Henry S. Craven, U. S. N., so openly denounced several years ago while he was employed as assistant engineer on the aqueduct, having been granted leave of absence for the purpose. The ring then had power enough to secure Mr. Craven's dismissal from that position, but their operations finally became so notorious that they were emptied out.

It is to the New World that the Cobden Club is chiefly looking as the most likely sphere for its vigorous foreign policy. It has done what it can in Europe, and is now turning its eye westward and bracing itself for the struggle which is to come. It cannot rest while the United States are unsubdued.—London Times, July 18th, 1880.

To Save Life

Frequently requires prompt action. An hour's delay waiting for the doctor may be attended with serious consequences, especially in cases of Croup, Pneumonia, and other throat and lung troubles. Hence, no family should be without a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has proved itself, in thousands of cases, the best Emergency Medicine ever discovered. It gives prompt relief and prepares the way for a thorough cure, which is certain to be effected by its continued use.

S. H. Latimer, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ga., says: "I have found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a perfect cure for Croup in all cases. I have known the worst cases relieved in a very short time by its use; and I advise all families to use it in sudden emergencies, for coughs, croup, &c."

A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middletown, Tenn., says: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes E. Bragdon, of Palestine, Texas, "believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinance, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now disponsable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often thus sunded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

BILIOUSNESS.

This very common complaint, which is caused by a dormant or inactive liver, can be cured in a short time by using Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, as can also the various diseases arising from inactive liver or kidneys. These organs, if inactive, will allow impure blood to enter the heart, causing tightness about that organ and palpitation.

She suffered thirty years.

MRS. DUDLEY CHANDLER, of Melrose, Mass., says: "I had suffered with Palpitation of the Heart more than thirty years before I found anything to give me essential relief. Last fall I tried Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, and, remarkable as it was, this Compound relieved me in two days, so that for several months afterwards I felt not the slightest touch of it, and am perfectly free from it now. Sometimes, before I took this Compound, the pulsations of my heart were so violent as to shake my whole body with rapid agitations, and at times I fainted and became entirely insensible. Now I am perfectly free from all this suffering. Consequently I can most sincerely and earnestly recommend this Compound to all like sufferers, as pre-eminently the best medicine I ever knew for Palpitation of the Heart."

This Compound is purely Vegetable, and strengthens and builds up the system while it eradicates disease.

Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

VENEZUELA'S GOLD MINES.

Auriferous Fields on the Banks of the Yuruari River—Scenes in Camp.

The climate is unhealthy, disposing persons to bilious fevers, and in the height of the rainy season the mortality is great among the negroes, who often sleep in the open air and take but little care of themselves. Chills and fever is a common complaint. Position in life has a great deal to do with the liability to sickness, as upon the quality of the living accommodations much depends. The fever seems to thoroughly weaken the blood of the sick, and for months after a sick man has left his bed he appears like a living corpse. Much of the disease contracted at the mines is no doubt due to excesses of various kinds, which seem to be inseparable from life in a mining country. When the greatest care is needed, in reference to every detail of eating, drinking, clothing and living, little is taken by the majority, and the result is that the various foreign employes, or officers as they are called—American, English and German—from the chief mining engineer down to the Irish blacksmiths, are continually sick or recovering from sickness.

I have seen over half the "officers" of one company sick, thus necessitating double work from the others, conducing to similar sickness. Doctors are plentiful, but they, too, are often laid up. At night a dense mist from the river covers the whole valley like a pall. No wonder there are fevers.

The ore from the mines, after being crushed, passes under the stamp heads, on to which a stream of water is flowing, and then crushed into fine powder from the battery over the amalgamation tables. These are of copper, covered with a coating of mercury. The gold particles amalgamate with the mercury, and the water carries the quartz grains on into the race below. The tables are cleaned every twenty-four hours, the mill being stopped to allow of this. The result from the day's working of this immense machinery is a couple of balls of varying size—say of an egg—of amalgam, which are carried down to the house, weighed and then deposited in the safe until a sufficient quantity is had for retorting. After retorting the resultant gold is ready for shipment. Some gold is shipped in the retorted form and some is melted and cast in the form of bars before shipment. The shipment of bullion takes place once a month, the various companies bringing their gold to the office whence the bullion train starts. The bullion is carried over the road in charge of a mounted party of guards well armed.

Bullion day is sort of a holiday for the chief officers of the companies, on which they all meet together and discuss mutual affairs. The bullion train in returning brings up a mail and the money to pay the labor and other expenses. Then, for many days, the scene at a company's office is a lively one, the miners besieging the windows for letters and with inquiries as to when pay day will come. The money comes up generally in English sovereigns, with occasionally some American gold. There is very little change in the country, and ten or five cent Venezuelan pieces are rare. English, French, German and American money is that chiefly in circulation. The standard of Venezuelan currency is a 100 cents, or sencillo dollar, worth about what our dollar is, but accounts in Venezuela are kept in Macuquino. A Macuquino dollar is worth about four-fifths of the sencillo dollar, or to be exact, 74.76 cents American gold. A five cent piece is a ten cent piece cut in two, and divided again it passes for two and one-half cents.

An event in life at a mine is the arrival of a freight train of bullock carts or burros. The Venezuelan in charge, after much fumbling, finds the bill of lading, and then comes the checking of the packages while all the idlers look on. Sometimes it is a cargo of boxes containing tins of green corn, tomatoes, oysters, lobsters, preserved fruits, etc., from the states. Then it is bulky machinery, stamp heads, flasks of mercury, dynamite or fuse. The smaller mining stores, such as dynamite, fuse, shovels, picks, machetes, hammers, drill iron, rope, etc., are kept in a store room in the living house of a mining company.

Let me describe a sleeping apartment at the mines, as it will give an idea of the manner of living. The floor is covered where the iron bed stood with matting, under which are some coffee sacks. The hammock, thrown up over the mosquito frame of the bed, is stretched across the room. The carrata roof, in which are numerous spiders and a friendly house snake, who occasionally comes down on the floor, is the ceiling. An immense toad, who is of use, as he catches many insects, lives under the bed, and is on good terms with a small dog of the country who sleeps in the room. The windows, without glass, are simply protected by rough Venetian shutters, and when it rains a steady stream pours in several places through the roof. The disagreeable insects known as chigoes are numerous, and great care has to be taken to avoid their acquaintance. The temperature at the mines is quite high during the day, but as the nights are cool, warm bed coverings are indispensable.

All over the country are scattered barrancos, or small shafts, sunk on to the different lodes, some abandoned and some still worked. These are dangerously near the roads in many cases, and great care has to be taken in riding about after dark. The best way is to let the reins lay loosely on the mule's neck and trust to his sagacity. The river water is used by many for washing, and that of the mines, well filtered, is often drunk, being kept cool in tenagas. These are porous earthenware jars, which are known curiously as "monkeys" in the West Indies.—New York Herald.

Method of Preserving Fruit.

Professor Tyndal has shown that atmospheric germs do not pass through a layer of cotton wool, and the discovery has been applied to keep preserved fruit by covering the jar holding it with cotton batting. The germs of putrefaction in the fruit are said to be rendered harmless by cooking, and the cotton batting keeps out those of the air.—Public Opinion.

How to Kill Wolves.

The natives of the Arctic regions have a barbarous, but effective, way of dealing with the wolves which are a pest there. Sharp blades are stuck in the ice and baited. The meat freezes, and in thawing it out with his tongue the blade cuts the tongue, ultimately preventing the beast from licking the snow, and thirst finally kills the animal.—Chicago Herald.

The Spanish Peanut.

The Spanish peanut is now very extensively used in Georgia for feeding to hogs. It is stated that the average crop is 125 bushels per acre. The hogs do all the harvesting, and they generally eat the vines as well as the nuts. It is estimated that an acre of Spanish peanuts will furnish four times as much hog food as an acre of corn.—Chicago Times.

Attention to Sanitation.

Within late years we have learned that contagious diseases are vastly more curable and less liable to spread, when treated in shelter tents than in our homes or hospitals; and we are more and more caring for the ventilation of our dwellings and school houses and churches, preferring the sunny side of our houses for sleeping rooms.

We are building our cities with wider streets, and providing access to clear sunshine and pure air in extensive parks. We are, moreover, demanding more scientific and faithful plumbing, and looking out better for the condition of our cellars. But we have not reached the limit of what is possible or desirable in this matter.—Youth's Companion.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachel's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

The World's Cotton Yield.

Though known from prehistoric times, the use of cotton for cloth did not become general until after the first successful American cultivation of the fiber in 1790. In 1791 the world's yield was 490,000,000 pounds, and that of the United States 2,000,000 pounds. Since then the American development of the industry has been stupendous, the present production of the United States being six times as great as that of the whole world a century ago, and its home consumption being equal to the world's product fifty years ago. It has been calculated that, with the appliances of 1790, the manufacture of the world's cotton in 1826 would have occupied about 50,000,000 people, while it would require 300,000,000 persons at the present time.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Of the professional pugilistic, the kidneys are small but active in a state of health. Their secretion contains impurities productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy, if allowed to remain. When they are inactive, the blood becomes choked with animal debris capable of destroying life. To promote their activity when sluggish with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is not only to guard against the diseases mentioned, but to prevent the fatty degeneration and ultimate destruction of the organs by those exceedingly dangerous maladies—Bright's disease and diabetes. Activity of the bladder also insures it against the formation of gravel, which it sometimes requires one of the most dangerous and painful operations in surgery to remove. Gravel, moreover, is a most agonizing complaint. The Bitters further commend themselves by remedying constipation, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and nervousness, and nullify influences productive of malarial disease.

According to the New York Press the Cleveland administration has carried its Anglomania so far as actually to employ an English vessel to dredge New York harbor. CONSUMPTION CURED.

AT THE ONE NIGHT STANDS.

Actor W. J. Florence Gives Some of His Experiences at the Cheaper Theatres.

The one night stand is commonly made in a theatre owned and managed by some fairly successful bill poster or alderman or real estate speculator, who knows as much about a play house and the way it ought to be run as I know about the Sanskrit originals of Mr. Arnold's poems. A good many of these theatres are on upper floors above shops and offices. They are approached by flights of narrow and winding stairs, and I never go out of one without thanking my stars that there has been no fire or panic during the night. Queer things happen in these up stairs places once in a while. John McCullough was playing "Hamlet" in a theatre of this sort some years ago. Just beneath the stage was a furnace, attached to a bakery or something of that kind, I believe, and when the trap was opened for the grave digger to get in, a gush of hot air came up that was stifling. The curtain went up, and you can wager that the grave digger made lively time getting that pit ready for Ophelia. The sweat poured from the poor man in streams, and he piped his little song and whistled his little speech and got out of there with a jump. When the queen came to scatter flowers on Ophelia's coffin the hot air caught them up and wafted them into the flies, for they were made of tissue paper. The curtain cut off that scene with a roar from the audience.

In these cheaper theatres the manager does not attend to business, but lets the house "run itself," and whatever you need in the way of properties you must beg, borrow, or buy, for he cannot be looked to, or, at least, relied on, to furnish a sofa, a fire screen, or a pitcher of water. The only time that he is punctual is when the business man is counting up receipts. The "stage" in these theatres is usually small, the scenery bad, the picked up orchestra set your teeth on edge, the programmes are cheaply printed and full of errors; lighting, heating, ventilation and cleaning are subjects that the proprietor has not brought himself to consider, and you begin your night's work under most discouraging circumstances. You change your clothes in a perfect sty of a dressing room, with cold air whistling through partitions of unpainted boards; you wash in a battered tin basin; you "make up" with a light on only one side of your face, and there is no look on your door. Then you go to your hotel—and there's another precious circumstance.

Hotel life in cities, as a rule, is not bad, especially if you have your pick of rooms and name your hours for meals, but you should see some of the hotels out west, and, worse still, down south. To all appearances they are comfortable and clean, and a glimpse of the dining room, with white cloths and porcelain and black waiters in place, is like a promise of merry sunshine; but wait until your dinner comes—hog, hominy, hog, water, hog, dry bread, then more hog. Everything swims in pork fat, and the cook throws in sand and cinders by way of seasoning. A troupe that struck a town one day when the regular dinner was over could not get a blessed thing to eat but bacon—no eggs, vegetables, bread, butter, coffee, milk or tea—just fried bacon. The star of the troupe glared over the table and went away, followed by the rest, and bought some crackers in a grocery.

Then there are the hours. You get through your play at 11, go to your hotel, rise at 4 or 5 to catch a train for your next stand, get there at noon, have something to eat, skirmish around for properties, perhaps rehearse, eat your dinner, go to the theatre and act and often have to take your next train directly after the performance. But there—from these grumblings one might fancy an actor's life to be all shadow and no sunshine. I have not dwelt on the pleasures of the life because they are more apparent, and everybody knows them—the kindly appreciation of the public, the good words one has from press and people, the odd and interesting sights and adventures one meets in traveling, the information that even the dullest picks up when he knocks around the world for some years, the friends one makes and the intervals of ease and comfort that come when an actor has established his reputation and his play has become popular. An actor's life, like most men's lives, has more pleasure than pain it,—W. J. Florence in New York World.

Blacks of the West Indies.

On the road we met barefooted darkeys, plodding steadily along; who gladly returned our salutations, and turned to stare at us as long as we were in sight. They carried everything with which they were encumbered on their heads—cocoanuts, jugs, coffee pots, cups, bottles—all as securely balanced as if those articles were a part of the anatomy of their bearer.

The children, mere pickaninnies, toddled along with cans and calabashes of molasses, yams, bananas, oranges, or what not, as firmly fixed on their crania as if they had been wens. A Martinique boy will stow away as many personal effects on the top of his head as a Yankee boy will find room for in the pockets of his trowsers.

We saw one youngster with a large grass mat, several feet in diameter, which he wore as jaunitly as a chip hat. From a distance he looked for all the world like an animated mushroom out for a stroll—an object, by the way, we should not have been at all surprised to fall in with during our travels in this land of sensitive plants, and ferns as tall as full grown cherry trees.—Down the Islands.

Not Ready for That.

A Mrs. Blank was spending the summer in the country, and was very anxious to catch a certain train. As that event seemed, from the leisurely gait of the horse, extremely uncertain, she urged the country driver to make the beast go faster. The coachman plied whip and reins with no apparent effect, while the lady alternately examined her watch and encouraged the driver. At last, however, her patience became completely exhausted, and, espying a place in the tough hide of the stolid brute where the harness had chafed, she cried out vehemently: "Hit him on the raw, Mr. Casseboom! Hit him on the raw!" "Ma'am," responded Mr. Casseboom, with unmoved

The Methods of the "Chigger."

When I was down on the Mosquito coast in Central America I found the country there an earthly paradise but for one thing. There were no snakes that I saw, no tarantulas, no wasps, no poisonous enemy of man but one, and that one was the chigger. I think I know more about the chigger than any other man in America. One day I felt a slight pain in the second toe of my right foot. I thought it was an ingrowing nail. The pain was at the right corner of the nail and I paid little attention to it. In a day or two the toe had swelled to double its size and I became alarmed. I took all sorts of medical advice, and finally I became convinced that I had accumulated a chigger.

The chigger is an insect about as big as the point of a pin, which works its way under the skin, usually near a toe nail. As soon as it finds a lodgment it lays a countless number of eggs, each of which turns out a new chigger, which bores farther in and lays more eggs, all in a few hours. Each of these new chiggers repeats the family programme and lays thousands of eggs, so that if the sufferer is not very careful he can easily lose a toe, a foot, or even a leg. The multiplication of the chigger is something almost incredible, and when it once has found a secure location the pain is like nothing except a continual spasm of toothache. It was three months before I could get the chigger out of my foot, and four months before I could wear a shoe. Talk about wasps, or spiders, or snakes! I would readily back the chigger to do more real execution in a given time than any other enemy which man has yet been able to find in the whole line of animated nature.—Col. Pat Donan.

A Race of Dwarfs.

One of the most striking things to be met with in the earlier pages of Emin Pasha's journal is a reference to a report which is brought to him between Lado and Dufile, on the Upper Nile, that a race of dwarfs inhabit mountain caves to the west of Beden. They were said to be only forty inches high, of a brown color and of great agility, to eat white ants and roots, and to shoot with very small arrows, which are poisoned and very difficult to extract. The pigmies he was inclined to regard as the remainder of a dwarf population which ages ago spread itself over central Africa.

Four years later he himself comes upon some specimens of the Akka, a pigmy people, divided into numerous small tribes, who lead a nomadic life in the Monbuttu country. One of these Akka "had a reddish, but rather dark skin (probably dirt), was very prognathous, rather swag bellied, but exceedingly nimble. His height was 3 feet 6 inches. His whole body was covered by thick stiff hair, almost like felt, which was especially thick on the breast. A girl 14 years of age measured 3 feet 7-8 inch in height! These people are said to be very expert hunters, but also very vindictive, so that the neighboring tribes are glad to let them have all they want for maintenance in return for skins and feathers, the products of the chase, which they prosecute with bows and arrows alone.—Chambers' Journal.

Why They Leave the City.

To see the world, its great features, its natural scenery, is a fine and good desire—is an enlarging and ennobling experience; to enjoy the rolling of the creamy-crested waves on the azure field of the sea, the spread of changing color on the mountain sides, the sweep of leagues on leagues of prairie, the depth and depth of forests, is all enriching to the soul, and sometimes refreshing to the body.

But it is not in this noble rage that the host of travelers leave the city; it is for the sake of gayety, in order to wear new clothes and see those of others, to tell of it, and because others do it. To some, of course, the need of a vacation is vital; a weak more of the same scenes, the old places, the old faces, is destructive to the nerves, and change of air is indispensable to continued existence. Of these we are not speaking. Let them go, and speed their going; it is the necessity of life that impels them. But the great majority of people, who go with no such need or motive, would perhaps, in the middle of their gayest season at sea side, spring, or mountain, gladly exchange cells with those who consider themselves city bound prisoners.—Harper's Bazar.

Inventions Patented by Women.

That women can invent and can patent their inventions is shown by a review of the patents issued to them. That three women should have patented three kinds of corsets, and four more should have devised four new kinds of bustles, and that one should have hit upon a combined corset and bustle, is not very astonishing. The wonder is, rather, that men should have, during the same period, devised five or six times as many new kinds of each article. It is not even unexpected when one finds that one woman has patented a new and useful plumber's trap to prevent sewer gas from escaping into a house from a washbowl. But when it is found, as the fact is, that one woman has patented a successful hay press, and another a machine for making barrels, the right for which has been purchased by a great barrel making corporation, it becomes apparent that woman's intellect can grasp intricate mechanical movements, and combine them for the benefit of the race.—New York Sun.

Japan's Civilization.

Japan has 250 newspapers, 1,000 miles of railway and 2,000 or 3,000 miles of telegraph line. A Japanese reporter collects news, but does not in every case write it. He tells what he knows to news writers.—Inter Ocean.

Ten Carloads of Potatoes.

The funniest thing in town is the mishap of a gentleman whose wife runs the store bill. He has been in the habit of having his cigar bill charged up as potatoes, and the other day his wife took her pencil and began to reckon. She finally found out that they had been whooping it up at a regular starch factory rate in potatoes. Why! they had eaten over ten carloads of potatoes this winter and the past year, and she just didn't believe that the account was right. The grocer and the smoker are just now between the

TRADE MARK S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD

An Important Announcement

About six weeks ago, while at business, I was suddenly attacked with excruciating pains in my feet, knees and hands. So severe the attack that I took my bed immediately, and in two or three days my joints were swollen to almost double their natural size, and sleep was driven from me. After suffering the most excruciating pain for a week, using liniments and various other remedies, a friend who sympathized with my helpless condition, said to me:

"Why don't you put Swift's Specific and use it. I will guarantee a cure, and if it does not the medicine shall cost you nothing."

I at once secured the S. S. S., and after using it the first day, had a quiet night and refreshing sleep. In a week I felt greatly benefitted. In three weeks I could sit up and walk about the room, and after using six bottles I was out and able to go to business. Since then I have been regularly at my post of duty, and stand on my feet from nine to ten hours a day, and am entirely free from pain. These are the plain and simple facts in my case, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries relative thereto, either in person or by mail. THOMAS MASKILLIE,

They are Scared.

A New York despatch says the idea of carrying North Carolina for the republican ticket has been ridiculed a good deal, but judging by the testimony of the democrats themselves it is not such a remote possibility after all. A few days ago the democratic state executive committee of North Carolina issued a confidential appeal for funds, setting forth the necessity of hard work in order to save the state. A copy of this appeal found its way to the republican national headquarters. It is highly interesting from a republican point of view, and reads as follows:

My Dear Sir — As you doubtless already know, a political campaign cannot be conducted without money. This committee is sorry, but in candor compelled to say that there is disorganization to an alarming extent, and that to secure the state in November to Cleveland and Fowle there must be systematic and unceasing work until the day of election. This will require funds. Knowing how zealous and liberal you always are in aiding the party, this committee feels bound to notify you of the situation and to ask you for pecuniary assistance. All contributions, when received, are placed in the bank and checked out when needed. As the names of all contributors, and the amount paid by each, is preserved, if there should be any surplus on hand at the end of the canvass there will be no difficulty in a pro rata distribution of it to those who have created the fund. Hoping to hear from you at the earliest moment I am yours very truly.

LIFE IN YOKOHAMA.

Curious Sights in the City—Native Character and Customs.

In visiting Japan from this country the direct course is to cross the continent to San Francisco, whence a three weeks' voyage will land the traveler in the commercial capital of Yokohama. When Commodore Perry opened this port in 1854 with a fleet of the American navy, it was scarcely more than a fishing village, but it has now a population of 130,000, with well built streets of dwelling houses, the thoroughfares broad, cleanly and all macadamized. The town extends along the level shore, but is backed by a half moon of low, wooded hills known as the Bluffs, upon which are the villas of the foreign residents, built after the European and American styles. A deep, broad canal surrounds the city, passing by the large warehouse and connected with the bay at each end, being crossed by several handsome and substantial bridges. From the Bluffs there is a charming and extended view. In the west, seventy miles away, the white, cloud like cone of Fujiyama, the one volcanic mountain of Japan, can be clearly discerned, while all about the visitor lie the attractive villas, beautiful gardens and groves of ornamental trees belonging to the foreign settlers.

In looking about Yokohama, everything strikes us as curious; every new sight is a revelation, while in all directions tangible representations of the strange pictures we have seen upon fans, Satsuma and lacquered ware are presented to view. One is struck by the partial nudity of men, woman and children, the extremely simple architecture of the dwelling houses, the peculiar vegetation, the extraordinary salutations between the common people who meet each other upon the streets, the trading bazars and the queer, toylike articles which fill them, children flying kites in the shape of hideous yellow monsters—each subject becomes a fresh study. Men propelling vehicles, like horses between the shafts, and trotting off at a six mile pony gait, is a singular sight to a stranger. So are the naked coolies, working by fours, bearing heavy bales or hogsheads swung from their shoulders upon stout poles, while they shout a measured chant by means of which to keep step. No beggars are seen upon the streets. The people are neat and cleanly. The houses are special examples of this—very small, seldom over twenty feet square and one story in height. All persons, foreigners or natives, take off their shoes before entering upon the polished floors. The conviction forces itself upon us that such universal neatness and cleanliness must extend even to the moral character of the people. A spirit of gentleness, industry and thrift is observable everywhere, imparting an Arcadian atmosphere to these surroundings.

In the houses which we enter there are found neither chairs, tables nor bedsteads; the people sit, eat and sleep upon the floors, which are at all times as clean as a newly laid table cloth. Here and there upon the roadsides moss grown shrines bearing sacred emblems are observed, before which women, but rarely men, are seen bending. The principal religions of Japan are Shinto and Buddhism, subdivided into many sects. The Shinto is mainly a form of hero worship, successful warriors being canonized as martyrs are in the Roman Catholic church. Buddhism is another form of idolatry, borrowed originally from the Chinese. As we travel inland, places are pointed out to us where populous cities once stood, but where no ruins mark the spot. A dead and buried city in Europe or Asia leaves rude but almost indistructible remains to mark where great communities once built temples and monuments, and where they lived and thrived, like those historic examples of mutability, Memphis, Paestum or Delhi, but it is not so in Japan. When it is remembered of what ephemeral material the natives build their dwellings, namely, of light bamboo frames and paper, their utter disappearance ceases to surprise us. It is a curious fact that this people, contemporary with Greece and Rome at their zenith, who have only reared cities of wood and temples of lacquer, have outlived the classic nations whose half ruined monuments form our choicest models. The Hellenic and Latin races have passed away, but Japan still remains, without a dynastic change and with an inviolate country.

In journeying inland, we are struck with many peculiarities showing how entirely opposite to our own methods are many of theirs. At the post stations the horses are placed in stalls with their heads to the passageway, and their tails show in place of their heads. Instead of iron shoes, the Japanese pony is shod with closely braided rice straw. Carpenters draw the plane toward them, instead of pushing it from them. It is the same in using a saw, the teeth being set accordingly. The tailor sews from him, not toward his body, and holds his thread with his toes. The women ride astride, like the Hawaiians. Manufacturing of various sorts is carried on to a large extent. We have evidence enough of this in the variety and quantity of native articles which are imported thence into this country. Yet the use of mechanical contrivances for the purpose of production is little known. Hand work is nearly the only process employed. The mode of husking rice which is common will illustrate this, being performed as follows: The grain is placed in a sort of mortar, into which a pestle falls, it being attached to a horizontal bar of wood supported in the middle by a fulcrum. On the end opposite to the pestle a man takes his position, and by stepping on and off the end of the bar he raises and lets fall the pestle upon the rice. Machinery is being gradually introduced from Europe and America, but is still regarded by the common people with distrust.—M. M. Ballou in Boston Herald.

Growth of the Brain.

The human brain reaches its greatest weight between the ages of 14 and 20 in both sexes; after that it grows continually smaller through life. While Intelligence is rapidly increasing from 20 to 60 years of age, the brain is diminishing. The time that a man knows most is from 70 to 80; but then his brain is smaller than when he was a boy between 7 and 14, the age when he thought he knew the most.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Try the Buttermilk Cure.

Through the simplest remedies relief comes, and the new methods of medicating a patient by food chiefly are carrying out this formula in Gen. Sheridan's case. Lactic acid, which is not far off from the beverage commonly termed buttermilk, has been doing peptic wonders, it is announced. A good many people who are "out of sorts" with liver troubles might try the buttermilk cure direct without waiting for an illness to have it prescribed for them. Especially old people and worn out people frequently find a fountain of youth in the churn's surplus.—Philadelphia Ledger.

commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

Mr. Cleveland demands in effect that there shall be a tariff for revenue purposes only. No tinkering with the tariff will suffice; no readjustment of duties will do. The only reform that common sense can accept of is one which unaffectedly substitutes the principle of unimpeded imports for that of tariff regulations.—London Standard.

With President Cleveland, Great Britain knows where she is.—Glasgow Herald.

We must now place our manufactures by the side of the agriculturist. * * Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.—Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. Cleveland has taken his stand on free trade, * * and on that broad question Mr. Cleveland's candidature naturally and necessarily carries English sympathy.—London Globe.

When our manfactures are grown to a certain proportion, as they will under the fostering care of the government, * * the farmer will find a ready market for his surplus produce, and, what is of almost equal consequence, a certain and cheap supply for all his wants.—John C. Calhoun.

The president is careful to state that he frankly declares his indifference to the charge of favoring free trade. His policy, he says, may be called by that or another name, but it is the policy he recommends to Congress, and which, he does not affect to deny, must alter the terms on which foreigners have access to the American market.—London Saturday Review.

This much is certain, another fierce contest is impending in America over the principle at issue. If it terminates, as it may be hoped it will do, in the direction of a relaxing of those imposts that now so vexatiously hamper commercial intercourse between Great Britain and the United States, we may look to an impetus being given to our home trade that will go far to make up for the depression of late years.—Haddingtonshire (Eng.) Courier.

Ex-Congressman John S. Wise of Virginia and General Mahone have buried the hatchet, and all is harmony.

atic and fostering care of the government. * * Equally important it is to provide at home a market for our raw materials.—James Monroe.

Grover Cleveland has done more to advance the cause of free trade than any Prime Minister of England has done.—London Spectator.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the sympathetic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

TOOK DOWN THE SIGN.

An amusing incident is reported to us in connection with the change of names of the stations of the York Harbor & Beach railroad—"York Beach" station to "Long Beach," and "Union Bluff" station to "York Beach." The hotel proprietors and property owners near Long beach were (and are) indignant that the name "York Beach" should be taken from their station and transferred to the station at the end of the line, and Messrs. Sanborn & Preble, proprietors of the Garrison house, proceeded to put up in a field exactly opposite the "Long Beach" station a huge sign on which was announced in big letters, "This is York Beach." This announcement was almost certain to be seen by every one in the cars, and as the sign was on private property of course it could not be interfered with by the railroad authorities, although it caused a good deal of talk among the passengers, some of the talk being not complimentary to the change of names. Recently, however, Messrs. Sanborn & Preble received from Supt. D. W. Sanborn of the Eastern division of the Boston & Maine railroad a very courteous note requesting the removal of the sign, and agreeing in case this was done that orders should be given to conductors to distinctly announce in every car, after an eastbound train should have left the York Harbor station, the name of every hotel (seven in number) at Long beach, in order that intending patrons of those houses might not be misled by the name "York Beach" into going past the station where they wished to alight. On this condition the sign has been removed.

BASE BALL.

New England League games, August 1st: Salem 9, Portsmouth 4; Manchester 4, Worcester 1

The game of ball at the south end grounds this afternoon between the Portsmouth and Dover clerks, will be worth witnessing, as there are several good players in the two nines. The placing of the men is as follows:

Portsmouth—2 b., Kelly; 1 b., Trefethen; c. f., Nash; s. s., Gardiner; c., Quinn; r. f., Nickerson; 3 b., Philbrick; p., Coleman; l. f., Conner.

Dover—c., Jones; s. s., Kimball; 2 b., Brewster; 1 b., Boyden; p., Hodsdon; c. f., Folsom; 3. b., Reade; l. f., Kittridge; r. f., Lord.

Coughlin, the new pitcher, is expected to arrive to-day, his brother Dave, our right-fielder, having gone to his home at Hyde park, to accompany him here.

PERSONAL.

Dr. Lucien Guptill of Charlestown, Mass., is visiting his father, Dr. Guptill of Eliot. Winslow Guptill of Boston, another son of the elder Dr. Guptill, is with his family also on a visit to his parents. The young doctor drove down in his private carriage.

Miss Edith Wendell will sing in the Episcopal church on Sunday forenoon.

Hon. Frank Jones has just returned from a trip to the northern part of this state, where he is engaged in building a line of railroad to connect with the Northern Pacific.

Mr. Edward E. Sise, of Portland, Me., is at Mr. Joseph Pierce's residence on Haymarket square.

Mr. Charles Sise, family and maid, of Montreal are at the Appledore for the season.

Mrs. Emil Richter is passing the month of August at the Appledore.

Mrs. Mitchell of New York, formerly Miss Rebecca Coburn, of this city, is passing August at the Appledore.

Capt. Oliver Ayers, captain of the police force of Chelsea, Mass., a native of this city, is visiting his sister, Mrs. John Huntress, of Christian shore.

The statement that the fare between this city and the Isles of Shoals has been reduced to fifty cents for the round trip every day in the week, was an error. The excursion-rate days are as before announced, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday; and to these days Sunday is now added.

The fishermen of Water street declare they will not vote for the Cleveland ticket on account of the attitude of the present administration toward them. They have always been depended upon to come to the polls to vote the regular ticket. When outside they would try to get in to the election. This makes their defection of considerable consequence. One of their number was on board one of the fishing vessels which had the American flag hauled down by a petty provincial official last year, who said "what do we care for your —— greasy old rag?"

Gen. Lew Wallace completed his biography of Gen. Harrison and forwarded to the publishers the last package of manuscript on Tuesday, July 31st. The book will be ready for the public about Aug. 14th.

Children's 38-cent and 50-cent colored cotton hose marked down to twenty-five cents. Parasols all marked down. L. E. Staples, No. 7 Market street.

Pears' Soap secures a fine complexion.

The old counting room formerly occupied, in ship building times, by Raynes & Fernald, and Pettigrew & Fernald, at Badgers island, has been occupied for the past three years by a private family. The lower part of the island has been built upon by cottages. It was here that the frigate America, commanded by John Paul Jones, was built. Master Badger was reported to have built ninety-nine ships there, and had the 100th vessel on the stocks at the time of his decease. When he died he said he was coming back to build 100 more. But it is not to be supposed that the "old man" would undertake to return to his old occupation in such times as these, when a reform democratic administration threatens to continue in power.

***

Officer Peverly thinks that in the statement concerning the behind-the-age management of the towns of Prince Edward island, from a visit to which he has just returned, and where he was most hospitably received as a visitor from the states, the town of Summerside in particular, should be excepted. But Summerside's management is largely influenced by people from the states.

The annual illumination at York beach will take place next Wednesday evening.

Arrangements are being made so that the annual fall field day of the Amoskeag Veterans may be held in this city.

There was quite a circus at the democratic caucus in ward one on Wednesday evening last, the larger portion of the voters all making motions at once; but the one that "took the cake" was made by a young parliamentarian, who moved that the candidates be balloted for by acclamation.

MARITIME NOTES.

The steamer Undine went to South Newmarket on Thursday afternoon to tow down a schooner.

Rhode Island porgie fishermen have been taking fish illegally in the waters of Buzzard's bay for several months. On the evening of July 31st the captain of steamer Cora P. White was warned by the police authorities to desist. He insisted on his right to fish, and said he intended to test the matter in court, but next morning, after getting ready for work, gave up the idea and headed his vessel for Rhode Island. An officer was anchored below in a yacht, ready to pounce on the leader of the fishing party.

The new Inman line steamer City of New York left Liverpool Wednesday afternoon, the 1st inst., on her first voyage to New York. A large crowd of people were at the landing stage and pier head to see her depart. She carries 1000 passengers, among them James G. Blaine, wife and daughter.

EXCURSION RATES.

The fare to the Shoals and back on Sunday by the steamer Oceanic is reduced to fifty cents for the round trip. The boat leaves Appledore wharf at 10:50 A. M., and arrives at the islands at noon, starting on her return at 2:30 P. M. This arrangement affords an opportunity of enjoying a most delightful ocean trip at excursion rates, passing two hours or more at the islands, and arriving back in time for church services in the evening.

The prohibition state committee have challenged the republicans and democrats to each furnish a speaker to hold a joint discussion with Gen. Clinton B. Fiske, presidential candidate of the prohibitionists, on the political issues of the present campaign.

The Western Union Telegraph Co., through its president, Dr. Green, is put down for a subscription of $10,000 toward electing Cleveland. J. Gould, its principal shareholder, is to stand a liberal assessment also. In return for this the scheme is that Mr. Cleveland's first message after his re-election shall advocate the purchase by the general government of all the Western Union lines and watered stock. The price which Uncle Sam will pay for this outlay will enable the liberal contributors to the Cleveland campaign fund to lay aside a handsome profit on the transaction. Mr. Gould may be in poor health, but he is well enough, when he sees the democratic party in the market, to give something for an option to purchase it in case it can be of use in his schemes.

Dr. Winslow S. Pierce, a cousin of President Franklin Pierce, died on Sunday at Brooklyn, N. Y. He was a graduate of Dartmouth college, practised medicine, and was a prominent politician in California in 1857 and later.

Rev. J. B. Merrill of Epsom recently received fourteen members into the Free-will Baptist church at that place.

To Save Life

Frequently requires prompt action. An hour's delay waiting for the doctor may be attended with serious consequences, especially in cases of Croup, Pneumonia, and other throat and lung troubles. Hence, no family should be without a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has proved itself, in thousands of cases, the best Emergency Medicine ever discovered. It gives prompt relief and prepares the way for a thorough cure, which is certain to be effected by its continued use.

S. H. Latimer, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ga., says: "I have found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a perfect cure for Croup in all cases. I have known the worst cases relieved in a very short time by its use; and I advise all families to use it in sudden emergencies, for coughs, croup, &c."

A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middletown, Tenn., says: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes E. Bragdon, of Palestine, Texas, "believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinance, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often dissuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as this oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

HUNT'S REMEDY

BILIOUSNESS.

This very common complaint, which is caused by a dormant or inactive liver, can be cured in a short time by using Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, as can also the various diseases arising from inactive liver or kidneys. These organs, if inactive, will allow impure blood to enter the heart, causing tightness about that organ and palpitation.

She suffered thirty years.

Mrs. DUDLEY CHANDLER, of Melrose, Mass., says: "I had suffered with Palpitation of the Heart more than thirty years before I found anything to give me essential relief. Last fall I tried Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, and, remarkable as it was, this Compound relieved me in two days, so that for several months afterwards I felt not the slightest touch of it, and am perfectly free from it now. Sometimes, before I took this Compound, the pulsations of my heart were so violent as to shake my whole body with rapid agitations, and at times I fainted and became entirely insensible. Now I am perfectly free from all this suffering. Consequently I can most sincerely and earnestly recommend this Compound to all like sufferers, as pre-eminently the best medicine I ever knew for Palpitation of the Heart."

This Compound is purely Vegetable, and strengthens and builds up the system while it eradicates disease.

Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

EN PASSANT.

1784.

A clatter of hoofs adown the lane,
A cottage door and a maiden shy;
A grave salute and a slackened rein;
A smile, a blush and a drooping eye.

A draught from a dainty hand—forsooth
A whispered word and a parting slow;
The noble steed and the gallant youth—
They will come this way again, I trow.

1884.

A flying vision, a flash of steel;
A silent rushing, a noiseless glide;
A cap doffed low and a lagging wheel,
A halt by a window opened wide.

A pretty girl in the slanting sun,
An echo of laughter, sweet and gay,
A waving handkerchief—ten to one
'Tis not the last of his trips this way.

—Emma A. Opper in Outing.

A Very Peculiar Weakness.

I know quite a number of people who avoid the telephone as they would a small pox patient, and who really and honestly believe that they could neither talk through it or receive messages over it, though its use is as simple to them as to any one else under the sun. I used to know a man who swore that he could not talk to any one through a speaking tube, a contrivance which, as everybody probably knows, is the best possible conductor of the human voice. The same weakness of the nerves that influenced this man's case probably governs the telephobiacs in their prejudice against this invaluable mechanism.—Alfred Trumble in New York News.

An Odd Water System.

Calcutta, in its central parts, is supplied with water from many miles up the Hooghly. It is settled and filtered in large reservoirs, and, seems, as it is pronounced to be, fairly pure water. Very careful people boil it; but the majority of the foreigners use it freely as it comes from the hydrants. It is carried into upper floors in goat skins. It looks queer to see coolies sprinkling the streets from skins slung over their shoulders. It is thus done throughout the esplanade, in the business streets coolies sprinkle from large movable hose; in outer parts from carts which are filled with water by women carriers.—Carter Harrison in

A Creature of Cleanly Habits.

It is interesting to note in many places in this city a small machine, scarcely larger than a bandbox, in which electricity is at work for the purpose of keeping an adjacent room cooled by means of revolving fans. The electric motor is the most genteel, as well as the most business like of machines, a sort of steam engine in a dress suit. It is neat enough for the parlor, it savors of neither oil nor steam, and is as steady in its movements as my lady's Geneva watch. Its revolutions are of special interest to those who remember that these are but another form of light. The same energy that turns the motor will, if passed into a bit of carbon, create electric radiance.

The motor and the light are brothers children of the same mother, yet possessed of diverse traits. The one is brilliant, the other busy; the one expends its energy in labor, the other in dispelling darkness. As a conveyor of power the motor is destined to find a welcome in the homes of the people. It is a creature of cleanly habits, pleasing appearance and correct principles. It will wave fans, run the sewing machine, turn the cream freezer, and perform other duties as yet not clearly defined. The electric motor will find its way to the home ere long.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The City of Siberia.

If I were asked to characterize Omsk in a few words, I should describe it as a city of 30,000 inhabitants, in which the largest building is a military academy and the most picturesque building a police station; in which there is neither a newspaper nor a public library, and in which one-half the population wears the Tsar's uniform and makes a business of governing the other half. The nature of the relations between the latter half and the former may be inferred from the fact that an intelligent and reputable citizen of this chinovnik dominated city, who had been kind and useful to us, said to me when he bade us good-by, "Mr. Kennan, if you find it necessary to speak of me by name in your book, please don't speak of me favorably."

"For heaven's sake, why not?" I inquired.

"Because," he replied, "I don't think your book will be altogether pleasing to the government; and if I am mentioned favorably in it, I shall be harried by the officials here more than I am now. My request may seem to you absurd, but it is the one favor I have to ask."—George Kennan in The Century.

Care of Our Bodies.

Few owners of fine horses do not spend from half an hour to an hour every day in grooming them with comb and brush. And they know this care helps to keep them in fine condition. Would not the same, or even a quarter of an hour spent daily in grooming, bathing and rubbing the body, the limbs, joints and skin be of equal benefit? There are men who spend from one to three hours every day doing this, and they find it prevents cold, rheumatism, sleeplessness and other physical maladies, promotes health and prolongs life. One man writes: "A few minutes given every morning bathing, rubbing and grooming the body is not a great sacrifice of valuable time. Twice so much is given graciously by many a thoughtful owner to the care of a horse whose value may be only a few hundred dollars, yet many persons exclaim that they have not time to spare for these hygienic attentions to themselves and their children."—Herald of Health.

On a Mental Drunk.

There is another kind of intemperance raging in our midst which injures and eventually kills many people, who die of respectable, though painful, diseases, on respectable beds. There are men and women who never use alcoholic stimulants, who are on a certain mental tension, a mental drunk, from year's end to year's end, and who are being worn out by such mental condition quite as rapidly as the person who drinks too much whisky. They go off prematurely. Their demise is sometimes attributed to a dispensation of providence. They have tempers they cannot control, or nerves which go into a twitter at the least cause for excitement, or brains always on the run trying to think and do a dozen things at once.—New York Star.

A Literary Curiosity.

A bookseller at Lyons named Roux is issuing a literary curiosity. It is a volume entirely of silk, to be published in twenty-five parts, of which fifteen have already appeared, at the price of $9 per number. The text is woven in the silk. As each number consists of only two leaves, the whole volume, containing the Roman Catholic mass and a number of prayers, will have only fifty leaves, round the Gothic text of which every leaf has a specially designed mediæval border. Both text and border are woven in black silk on a white surface, and the effect is said to be tiresome artistic. Chicago

Parisians Not All Frivolous.

Grace Greenwood says that all Parisian women are not frivolous, any more than all Boston women are profound. She does not believe that Anglo-Saxons enjoy a monopoly of home virtues an practical piety, and she does believe that the great majority of French wives are loyal, French mothers tender, French grandmothers and elderly maiden ladies devout.—Harper's Bazar.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachael's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, which herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

How loving they are; this is always a sure sign. After the first year sometimes it don't hold good. A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

A Pioneer's Family Basket.

It was early in March, long years ago, when one of the pioneer settlers of Oxford county made up his mind to move his family from Massachusetts to that favorite region. He had seven little ones and feared they could not endure so long a journey and the piercing cold. How do you think he took care of them? The father obtained from a neighbor a great basket, twelve feet by six, and four feet high. It was fitted on an ox sled and was made for the purpose of transporting grass seed. The seven little ones were packed in straw in this basket, like so many kittens or pigs, and made the journey safe and warm. The basket is yet preserved by the pioneer's descendants. —Lewiston Journal.

A Lightsome Heart.

Like the Light Weights

Of the professional pugilistic, the kidneys are small but active in a state of health. Their secretion contains impurities productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy, if allowed to remain. When they are inactive, the blood becomes choked with animal debris capable of destroying life. To promote their activity when sluggish with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is not only to guard against the diseases mentioned, but to prevent the fatty degeneration and ultimate destruction of the organs by those exceedingly dangerous maladies—Bright's disease and diabetes. Activity of the bladder also insures it against the formation of gravel, which it sometimes requires one of the most dangerous and painful operations in surgery to remove. Gravel, moreover, is a most agonizing complaint. The Bitters further commend themselves by remedying constipation, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and nervousness, and nullify influences productive of malarial disease.

The Supreme court of New Jersey has affirmed the constitutionality of the high license and local option law and the rumsellers are unhappy.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

MAIL CARRIERS' EXPERIENCES.

Some of the Tales They Can Tell—Chat with a Reporter.

What family jars has the letter carrier witnessed; of what romantic stories has he been the bearer! Many little missives has he carried to the love sick maiden, which she has tenderly placed beneath her pillow at night, to sleep and to dream on. Then again what bitter memories have some of his errands evoked! What aching hearts have longed for absent loved ones, for some message that would tell of their existence, and when death rapped at the door the letter carrier was the first to bear the announcement.

These were the thoughts that suggested themselves to a reporter the other day as he contemplated "one of the best" hurrying along from door to door of a populous tenement district. The shrill whistle sounded at frequent intervals denoted his coming, and from window and basement dozens of heads protruded and asked the one all absorbing question, "Anything for me?" It was amusing to see their different expressions as they received the little envelopes. Some were enraptured and kissed the paper passionately, while others frowned and glanced anxiously at the bearer. Perhaps some creditor demanded payment for an overdue bill, or perhaps the scrawl meant even more.

"You would like to know just what kind of life this is?" remarked a carrier. "Well, it is not quite as rosy at it appears. It is getting better, however, every year, and now that we are about to participate in the benefits of the eight hour law work will be more pleasant."

The reporter had followed the carrier from block to block until every letter had been delivered. Then, as he had a few mements to spare, the gray coated official sat down to tell his story.

"I don't know of any business where we see more of human life than ours," he commenced. "The lights and shadows of life are pretty distinctly marked and we see them both. Sometimes we feel just as much pleasure in delivering a letter as the receiver in getting it. Sometimes when an ominous black bordered envelope falls into our hands we are sorry that we have to deliver it. Just what hours we will have to work after the rearrangement I do not know," he said. "At present our duties are pretty onerous. In the branch offices collectors have to report as early as 4:40 o'clock in the morning, or five minutes before the regular time for starting out. Forty-five minutes are then consumed in collecting from the various boxes, after which we return to the station with the mail. Then we start to face up.

"You don't know what facing up means? Well, that is what we call sorting our mail and getting it in order for our route. Facing up takes all the time up to 6 o'clock. Then we start out and deliver the letters. We make a prompt return to the office. Collections have in the meantime been made and again we start facing up.

"Every trip is but a repetition of the other. We make them hourly, and are kept constantly on the move until 11 o'clock. Then we swing. This is what we call taking a rest. In other words, there is no work for us to do until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Then we come on again and work until the darkness of evening has fallen over the city.

"You want to know what we see on the route?" and the letter carrier dusted a few grains of cigar ashes from his bag. "Well, it is funny just what we do see; then again it is sad. The saddest of all my experience occurred one day when I delivered a letter to an old man who lived alone in a dilapidated house on Park row. It was a mourning letter, and as I handed it to him the old man's fingers trembled. He tore it open convulsively, and as he read the lines he tottered and fell into my arms. The letter was from his daughter, who lived with her brothers in a fashionable house up town. It stated that her mother, the old man's wife, was dead and would be buried that afternoon. The girl also warned her father not to attend the funeral or there would be a scene, as his own sons would not permit him there.

"He wept as he told me his story. There had been a quarrel, and he had been driven from home. He had never darkened it up to that time. That day my duties brought me around Grace church. I saw the funeral cortege, but what attracted me most was the figure of the old man outside on the sidewalk. His lips quivered with emotion as he saw the casket that contained the remains of his wife, but he dared not approach. He held a daisy in his hand, perhaps in remembrance of other and happier days, and he was still turning it idly when I passed along.

"Yes, it is a funny kind of life, half sunshine, half clouds. We have our own troubles to worry us as well as other people's. We meet all nationalities, and hear all kinds of languages spoken. We get letters with writing such as none could understand; we have to examine and look out for log letters, and are held responsible for any error. Log letters are undirected ones. We are supposed to know all our route, and see that it gets to its proper destination. Well, it is time for me to start, so good-by," and the letter carrier walked briskly away.—New York Star.

In a Jamaica Kitchen.

The kitchen, which is always an outside cabin, is minus a chimney; an elevated sort of range or hob is built out into the floor, on which the cooking is done, sometimes by means of charcoal, but oftener with brushwood and smaller sticks, the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. There is generally an old fashioned brick oven outside for baking bread, but it is seldom used, as few families now bake their own bread. They buy it if near or in a village from a baker's cart which makes its rounds in the country from the nearest store, where it can be procured fresh twice a week. Many households do without the article altogether, or only get enough to serve with "early morning coffee," a small bit of toast being put with each cup. They use in its place some of the substitutes of which are classed under the one generic term, "bread kind." These consist of boiled or baked yam, roasted bread fruit, potatoes, rice, cooked unripe plantains, "bamme" and "cassava cakes," both of which are breads made from the grated manioc root from which tapioca is also prepared.—Detroit Free Press.

A Snake Charmer Falls a Victim.

India has just lost a snake charmer, one Kondajee Muboojee, who fell a martyr to his belief in his own powers. A lad 6 years old, named Vittoo Heerree, was bitten by a cobra at Mazagon, Bombay, and, as usual, a snake charmer was at once sent for. Kondajee arrived at the spot in half an hour, but the boy was already dead. The snake charmer inquired where the cobra had taken refuge, and, on a woodpile being pointed out, he removed the wood, found and seized the snake, and endeavored to make it bite the dead boy, declaring that if it did so the child would at once be restored to life. For two hours he persevered, but the snake refused to strike the body, and at last, irritated beyond endurance, turned and bit Kondajee in the hand. The snake charmer calmly placed the snake in a copper vessel and then sat down. A vehicle was sent for and the man placed inside, but by the time he reached home he was dead.

The story testifies strongly to the belief of the snake charmers of India in their power over the snakes, and in the existence of a superstition that the second bite of a snake will restore the life that the first has taken away. The apathy of the Hindoo is evident by the fact that the snake charmer used no effort whatever to save his own life. Whether he thought that he was proof against its ill effects was not stated in the evidence given at the inquest held on the body of the child, but it is clear that he had no belief in the virtues of any antidote or mode of treatment. It is most probable that he was confident in the power of the drugs, ointments, or charms he had previously used to protect him, or the evidence of the spectator showed that upon finding the snake in the woodpile he had seized it without the slightest hesitation. It is certainly singular that a man accustomed to handle snakes should have been so convinced that their bite had power to restore life as well as to cause death.—Foreign Letter.

The Arabs in Central Africa.

The havoc of Arab traders in Central Africa is vividly illustrated by the fact that one of the tribes Bishop Taylor intended to reach when he started his missions three or four years ago was wiped out of existence some time before the bishop's missionaries finally arrived at the borders of the desired country. The bishop was attracted to this region by Lieut. Wissmann's description of the big city of the Beniki, where Dr. Pogge and he traveled for miles along one street. Camping at the further end of the town, they were visited by about five thousand of the inhabitants, whom the travelers described as a gentle, cheerful and industrious people. About the time Dr. Summers, of the Taylor missions, reached the adjoining Tushilange country, Lieut. Wissmann again visited the Benikl region, where all was silent in the big town, the huts in ruins and the street overgrown with tall grass. The Arabs from Nyangwe had swooped down upon the peaceful spot and had killed, captured or dispersed the inhabitants.

How to put an end to the terrible outrages of the Arabs in Central Africa is a problem that is beginning to give serious concern to all the promoters of white enterprises in Africa.—New York Sun.

Some Hints Concerning Exercise.

It is a positive advantage in the amount of work accomplished if we turn aside to rest after meals. But by rest I do not mean doing nothing except digest, but digestion is advantaged by light exercise. Exercise for this purpose should be of a sort that gives pleasure, and is not a task. Exercise that gives no thrill of delight is at least defective, if not radically wrong. To walk a mile as a duty is nearly valueless. To ramble in pleasant woods for an hour, as a botanist, exercises the nerves rather than the muscles, and is of vast value. What, then, is our physiology of study in relation to digestion? (1) Do not touch any sort of literary work, a book, pen, or even newspaper, for two hours after eating. For the same reason you should not lecture, sing, or preach under the same conditions. (2) Work your brain with impunity for several hours after such rest. (3) Such rest should not be absolute indolence, but light exercise, and pleasurable. (4) Do not go from study to the table directly There should be a brief reaction before dining.—M. Maurice, M. D., in Globe-Democrat.

Emperor Nero's Canal.

Among the most important public works in Greece is the canal through the Isthmus of Corinth, of which Gen. Turr is the De Lesseps. It was begun in 1882, and was to be completed this year, 1888, but it will not be finished for several years yet. It has the same breadth and depth as the Suez canal, and is about four miles long. The deepest cut is 250 feet. It passes through solid rock, and its sides are as yet left almost vertical. It is to be lighted by electricity. The cost was estimated at $7,000,000. This canal will save vessels from Trieste or Brindisi to Athens or Constantinople about 200 miles; it will save ships from Gibraltar about seventy-five miles. It has been dug largely by Italians, Turks and Montenegrins. Few Greeks have been employed; they do not take kindly to such work. The canal carries out a plan that was cherished by many of the ancients; it actually follows the course which was surveyed by order of the Emperor Nero. —Thomas D. Seymour in Scribner's.

The Salon's Prize Picture.

The grand prize has been carried off by M. Detaille, who painted for this salon a big picture which he named "The Dream." It is a clever painting, but not a masterpiece, and it mixes up realism and dreamland. We are shown a camp of soldiers, or rather soldiers wrapped up in their rugs and asleep on a moor, or, at any rate, what seems in the moonlight a wide plain. The arms are stacked and flags are stretched from stack to stack. Sentinels pace up and down. Far off the military incendiary has been at work, and the moonbeams struggle through a lowering sky. One must stand at some distance to see the dream, which appears in clouds that take the form of a triumphant army of the great Napoleon. The standards which waved at Fleurus, Marengo and Austerlitz are borne by the spectral host—so spectral that at any moment it may be dispersed by a moonbeam.—Paris Cor. Argonaut.

TRADE MARK S.S.S. FOR THE BLOOD

An Important Announcement

About six weeks ago while as business, I was suddenly attacked with excruciating pains in my feet, knees and hands. So severe the attack that I took my bed immediately and in two or three days my joints were swollen to almost double their natural size, and sleep was driven from me. After suffering the most excruciating pain for a week, using liniments and various other remedies, a friend who sympathized with my helpless condition, said to me:

"Why don't you get Swift's Specific and use it. I will guarantee a cure, and if it does not the medicine shall cost you nothing."

I at once secured the S. S. S., and after using it the first day, had a quiet night and refreshing sleep. In a week I felt greatly benefited. In three weeks I could sit up and walk about the room, and after using six bottles I was out and able to go to business. Since then I have been regularly at my post of duty, and stand on my feet from nine to ten hours a day, and am entirely free from pain. These are the plain and simple facts in my case, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries relative thereto, either in person or by mail. THOMAS MARKLEE.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—I have warded off a severe attack of rheumatism by a timely resort to Swift's Specific. In all cases where a permanent relief is sought this medicine commends itself for a constitutional remedy that thoroughly eradicates the seeds of disease from the system.

A Horse Thief's Sharp Trick.

A young man called on George H. Davis of Cambridge, Mass., recently, and wanted to buy Mr. Davis' horse. He tried the animal in Mr. Davis' presence and appeared pefectly satisfied with his bargain, but said he would call the next day and get the horse. He called as he agreed, but in the absence of Mr. Davis. On telling the people in the house that he had seen Mr. Davis and paid for the team, he was allowed to hitch it up and drive away. The team consisted of a gray mare and box buggy, and is valued at $300.

Still a Mystery.

Ever since the disappearance of Miss Gertrude B. Whitney, who was employed as a clerk in the Boston post-office, some of her friends have insisted that she had gone to Montana to meet a young man to whom she was engaged, but a letter has been received from the young man, Edward L. Peyton, saying that he knows nothing of Miss Whitney's whereabouts. The mystery surrounding the girl's disappearance is now deeper than ever.

UNDISPUTED MERIT.

The great success of the Royal Baking Powder is due to the extre care exercised by its manufacturers to make it entirely pure, uniform in quality, and of the highest leavening power. All the scientific knowledge, care and skill, attained by a twenty years' practical experience are contributed toward this end, and no pharmaceutical preparation can be dispensed with a greater accuracy, precision and exactness. Every article used is absolutely pure. A number of chemists are employed to test the strength of each ingredient, so that its exact power and effect in combination with its co-ingredients is definitely known. Nothing is trusted to chance, and no person is employed in the preparation of the materials used or the manufacture of the powder, who is not an expert in his particular branch of the business. As a consequence, the Royal Baking Powder is of the highest grade of excellence, always pure, wholesome and uniform in quality. Each box is exactly like every other, and will retain its powers and produce the same and the highest leavening effect in any climate, at any time. The government chemists, after having analyzed all the principal brands in the market, in their report placed the Royal Baking Powder at the head of the list for strength, purity and wholesomeness, and thousands of tests all over the country have further demonstrated the fact that its qualities are, in every respect, unrivalled.

Daniel Gault of Peterboro, this state, was found insensible in a vacant lot at the corner of Dover street and Harrison avenue, Boston, on the night of the 1st inst. He had wounds on his head, and his pockets were turned inside out. On being taken to the city hospital he revived, and said he had been knocked down and robbed of $58.

THE GIANT BANYAN.

Description of the Big Tree of Calcutta's Botanical Garden.

But the great "sight" of Calcutta is unquestionably its splendid Botanical garden, on the further shore of the Hooghly, and the giant banyan tree which stands in the midst of its palms and bamboos like a king amid his courtiers. It is true that the five mile drive thither across the Canning bridge and through the endless bazars of Howrah (the Brooklyn of Calcutta) is anything but an easy enterprise to achieve satisfactorily. If you start in the morning the whole journey there and back is one long martyrdom to a heat and dust and glare which only those who have been in India can fully appreciate. If you start in the evening you arrive just in time to see the whole garden vanish from your eyes into the deepening darkness of night, and have to console yourself perforce with the time honored joke, "There was nothing to be seen, and I saw it thoroughly." The latter result attended the first effort which we ourselves made to reach the renowned banyan, and the bazar happening to be unusually full that night, our homeward drive through it in the dark, with an accompaniment of shouting and whip cracking worthy of a royal "progress," vividly recalled Sir George Trevelyan's famous definition of "hell" as "a monosyllable used by cabmen and omnibus drivers preparatory to running over deaf people."

But such a spectacle as the monster tree of Calcutta is well worth a double journey, and our second attempt was more fortunate than our first. Starting from our hotel at 4 p. m., we reached the garden a little before 5, and had already driven more than half way across it when our "gharri" (carriage) halted suddenly at the entrance of a long, straight avenue flanked by two ranges of lofty trees, and our Bengal driver, pointing to the far end of it with his lean, brown forefinger, said impressively, "Dekho, burrah gach wahan hai" (look, there is the big tree).

We followed the pointing finger with our eyes, but saw nothing except a thick grove of small trees, in which the path seemed to lose itself, and this was all we could make out till we got within about 100 yards of it. Then, to our amazement, we found that the supposed grove was all one giant tree, and that its countless trunks were nothing more than the shoots which it had sent down into the earth from each of its mighty boughs, to take root there and spring up again till the whole plantation was covered. After walking many yards beneath one huge bough, and noting that this giant was only one among scores—some of which, although so vast and ponderous as to need supports of solid brickwork, seem mere twigs compared with the enormous mass of the parent stem—I began to have a clearer idea of the real size of this vegetable Goliath than I could ever have gained from the inscription attached to one of its largest branches stating that the girth of its trunk is 42 feet, that the circumference of its crown is 850, and that it has sent down into the earth 252 "aerial roots."

The same inscription tells you that the tree is more than 100 years old. When it was first planted Warren Hastings was turning his face homeward to figure in the greatest political trial which England had seen since Cromwell and his grim comrades sat in judgment upon "the man Charles Stuart." Two-thirds of India and the whole of Burmah were still independent of the British crown. Frederick the Great was still reigning in Berlin. The French revolution lay hid in the unknown future, and the battle of American independence, though nobly fought, was not yet won. And it may be that when not one stone of Calcutta shall remain upon another, and when tigers shall prowl and vultures shriek over the ruins of the viceroy's palace, the giant tree will still upreer amid a vast solitude those mighty boughs that once shaded the bravest men and fairest women of India, a silent and solitary mourner at the tomb of that great empire whose childhood was coeval with its own.—David Ker in New Times.

Danger in Sea Bathing.

Sea bathing is a common, but often unsuspected, source of injury to the sense of hearing. People should always be careful how they wash their ears at home. In this operation, simple though it may appear, and harmless as it is in other respects, a portion of the fluid—small it may be—passes into the outer passage of the ear and becomes lodged there, as it is a difficult matter to dry this passage, especially in the inner half of its extent. The water which thus remains is gradually removed by evaporation and absorption, and a chilled condition of the passage results, highly conducive to inflammation of the part, and subsequent impairment of the organ of hearing. To obviate this danger stop the ears with oiled wool.

Bathing in the sea is dangerous in other ways for old people, for very young children (especially before the first dentition has been completed), for persons of full habit of body, for those whose circulation is weak or irregular or who are suffering from heart disease, chronic chest affections, disorders of the brain or nervous system, or local accumulations of blood, such as hemorrhage from the nose, lungs, etc.—Home Journal.

Folk Lore of the Oak.

The oak is a tree celebrated in mythology and folk lore. Many of the events of the early Jewish history are connected with it, and the oak of Shechem, the oaks of Bashan and other trees of the same kind seem to attest the importance of this tree. It was even more important to the Druids, who venerated it and its parasite, the mistletoe. Mysterious properties were sometimes accorded to oak trees. In one part of England ague was cured by passing the sufferer under an oak branch that had taken root in the ground. Near certain cross roads in Hertfordshire stood an oak which was approached to effect a cure for the same malady. This was done by pegging a lock of hair into the tree and wrenching it from the head.

An old German law forbade any one from cutting down an oak tree. The oak and the hazel were said to be on bad terms, and could not agree. In England this prohibition seems formerly to have included other trees.—F. S. Bassett in Globe-Democrat.

A Startling Innovation.

Frank R. Stockton, that popular novelist of infinite quaint humors, is held responsible for a most startling innovation in the way of wedding trips, recently introduced in Washington. After a certain wedding ceremony, at which Mr. Stockton was present, instead of the young couple going on a wedding trip, the bride's parents were showered with rice and old slippers and banished on a two weeks' exile, while the bride and groom were left in possession of the house.—Frank Leslie's.

Lucky Boston.

The latest of fortune's favorites to receive a large sum of money from a very small investment are Messrs. Moore, Spaulding & Co., the wholesale dealers in millinery goods at 17 and 19 Summer street. Messrs. Moore, Spaulding & Co., held one-twentieth of ticket 90,443, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000 in the June drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery. When questioned about their good fortune by a Record reporter a member of the firm, illustrating his well-known character for modesty, said he did not care to talk about it, but the reporter learned that Friday last Mr. Spaulding received from Adams Express Co. a draft on the Maverick bank for $15,000 which had been promptly forwarded upon receipt of the winning ticket at New Orleans. The firm it is said has from time to time made small investments of this kind but never had quite such good luck as in the present case, when they have found themselves among the numbers who, purchasing tickets through the New England agency, have received over $75,000 in cash within a month.—Boston (Mass.) Record, July 3d.

ACCIDENTAL.

Moses Moore and Henry Young, while grappling in the river at Dover on the 2d inst., back of Trickey's coal shed, for an anchor they had lost a few days before, drew to the surface the dead body of John O'Brien of Hudson, Mass., a laboring man who had evidently fallen from the wharf while intoxicated. The finding of the body was the first known of the accident.

A man by the name of Weeks, belonging in Greenland, was thrown from his wagon on Penhallow street last Friday forenoon through the breaking of the whiffletree, and had his right hip and arm considerably bruised, although no bones were broken. He was carried into the house of Mr. John E. Roberts, and cared for by a physician.

Mr. Joseph Danielson, while chopping wood on Thursday last for Mr. C. E. Walker, very severely lacerated the forefinger of his left hand. He was attended by Drs. Sherburne and Whittier.

Three elephants broke loose during a procession in Munich, trampled to death a man, a woman and a child, and so badly frightened a woman that she died. Much damage was done to property.

Statistics of the the cost of public education in Prussia have just been published. They show that the cost is fifteen cents per head.

The Vandeleur tenants in Ireland who offered resistance during eviction have been sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for terms varying from one to six months.

Patrick Berry, a returned American residing near Listowel, Ireland, has been arrested on suspicion of murdering Forbham, a boycotted farmer.

The centennial exhibition at Melbourne Australia, was formally opened on the 1st inst.

It is said that the thirty-five cases against the Boston & Providence railroad company which arose from the Bussey bridge accident, and were placed in the hands of George Fred Williams, have been settled without a trial, two of the cases being referred to arbitrators. In the case of Oscar H. Norman the arbitrators awarded the plaintiff $18,000. The highest amount received from any one injured in the accident was $25,000, and it is understood that the whole cost to the company was about $100,000.

Round-trip tickets to the Shoals and back by steamer Oceanic to-morrow, fifty cents each.

WHAT IS

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS' HEARING.

A hearing before the late board of county commissioners was held in the office of S. W. Emery, Esq., on the 3d inst., on the matter of placing gates at the Creek crossing of the Concord railroad, J. W. Fellows appearing for the railroad, and City Solicitor Emery for the city. No decisssion was reached, but all agreed that some action be at once taken. It was stated that the road was willing to station a flagman there.

PATENT SUITS DISCONTINUED.

In the suits pending in the United States Circuit court for this district in favor of the American Box Machine Co. against the Portsmouth Shoe Co. and against other parties, six in number, brought to recover damages for an alleged infringement of the letters patent owned by the plaintiffs for a box covering machine, an agreement has been filed for a discontinuance of all the suits, a satisfactory settlement having been agreed upon by the parties.

LAWN TENNIS.

In the lawn tennis tournament on the 2d inst., the third round in singles opened the play, the score being as follows:

Third round—McMullen beat Tallant, 6—4, 6—1; Chase beat Wright, 6—0, 6—3; Campbell beat Hoppen, 6—4, 3—6, 7—5; Mansfield beat Shaw, 6—1, 6—3.

Fourth round—Chase beat McMullen, 6—3, 1—6, 6—3; Campbell beat Mansfield, 6—4, 5—7, 6—3.

The first round of doubles was ended by Sears and Shaw beating Mansfield and Wright, 6—4, 9—7.

Second round, doubles—Sears and Shaw beat Jennings and Chase, 7—5, 8—2, 6—2. This left Weeden and Hopper to play Campbell and McMullen, and the winners to play Sears and Shaw on the finals.

THE PICNIC.

The Mystic Veterans had a glorious day for their outing on Thursday, and made the most of it. The party numbered over sixty, and included, besides the ancient mariners, seven doctors, one coroner (rather a small allowance of coroner to so much medical man) and a [illegible] in his 40, chief of police, police magistrate, four lawyers, mayor and ex-mayor, and other officials. Of course nobody wanted to trouble that crowd. By the courtesy of Sergeant Weizel, dinner was served in the United States forest, in the rear of Fort McClary. Base ball, shooting matches—including a special challenge match between Boatswain Choate and Ex-Mayor Sise, in which the merchant service defeated the navy—were among the sports of the day, and the third reunion of the Veterans was as successful as either of the others, than which no more can be said. As usual, Capt. "Rashe" Trefethen of the steamer Mystic courteously tendered transportatino, taking the party both ways.

THE LAKE SHORE RAILROAD.

It is said that the building of this road is assured, the contract has been given out, and the dirt is to fly within a week. The road is to extend from the Weirs to the terminus of the Boston & Maine railroad at Alton Bay. The funds for its construction come, it is reported, from the treasury of the Concord railroad. If this is true, then there seems to be the same policy to prevent the people in the Lake region from the enjoyment of the results of competition, as is now conferred and even claimed was the purpose of the Concord road in making its illegal contract with the Manchester & Lawrence road. The Lake Shore road controlled by the Concord railroad is simply a way over which the Concord keeps the key. In the hands of the Concord managers, all competition for business connections with Portsmouth over the new line will of course be discouraged. The mistake of the Boston & Maine railroad in not building this line, if they ever had the power so to do, years ago, seems apparent. In the hands of the opponents of the B. & M. the new line will resemble some of our navy yards, with splendid opportunities and facilities for great results, but prevented from development by a controlling element which has other objects to serve.

BASE BALL.

At Salem, on the 3d inst., the home club beat the Portsmouths, fourteen to nine.

The game between the Dover clerks and the Portsmouth clerks on the South street grounds Friday afternoon was won by the home nine, seven to four.

The Manchester and Portsmouth clubs play on the south-end grounds this afternoon; game called at 3:30 o'clock.

Mr. Wilbur J. Rockwood has resigned as principal of the Jones school in this city, and accepted the position of submaster in the English high school at Lynn, Mass., at a salary of $1250, for the first year. Mr. Rockwood was offered an equal position in the Haverhill high school, and also the sub-mastership of a Boston grammar school at a much larger salary, but he prefers high school work.

The republican caucus for the nomination of a candidate for mayor will be held at the court house this evening from four o'clock to eight.

Dr. Andrew B. Sherburne has purchased of Mrs. Nathaniel Weeks the house No. 34 Islington street, recently occupied by Mr. Willis G. Myers.

Mrs. Augusta Jones, widow of Samuel Jones, died at her home in Stratham on the night of the 2d inst. of paralysis, aged seventy-six years. She leaves six children, Daniel W. Jones of Boston, Mrs. Hollis Pease, of South Newmarket, Mrs. Simon Veazie of Stratham, S. Plummer Jones of this city, and Mrs. Frank Neale of South Newmarket.

Children's 38-cent and 50-cent colored cotton hose marked down to twenty-five cents. Parasols all marked down. L. E. Staples, No. 7 Market street.

Mr. Joseph H. Jameson received on the 3d inst. 2000 lbs. of cod and haddock, which were fowarded mostly to E. S. Newton at Manchester. A swordfish weighing 400 lbs. was also sold to him.

Mr. Lorenza B. Favor on Friday assumed his duties as manager of the Western Union Telegraph office in this city, vice Horace S. Hatch, resigned. Mr. Favor comes highly recommended as a gentleman and expert electrician. During his years of service as manager of the Northampton, Mass., office, from which place he came to Portsmouth, he won the confidence and respect of the entire business portion of the city, and it was to their great regret that his transfer to this city was made.

It was reported on Water street Friday that Mr. Joseph H. Jameson, nominated the previous evening for councilman, is ineligible to that office, for the reason that his legal residence is in another ward. Joseph has many friends, however, who would like to see him elected—but on a different ticket.

Robert Menton of Danbury, Conn., died from blood poisoning, the effects of a bite by a Mexican pony two weeks ago.

Nov. 6th, 1811, General Harrison marched to Tippecanoe, and that night the Indians made the attack which brought on the battle and the victory which gave General Harrison the name of "Old Tippecanoe." Nov. 6th, 1860, Abraham Lincoln was elected president of the United States, and the republican party was given a twenty-four years' lease of the government. Nov. 6th, 1888, General Harrison, the "young Tippecanoe," will be elected president, and the republicans will again return to power. President Cleveland believes in signs, and he no doubt sees that Nov 6th is an unlucky day for the democratic party, and of good luck for the republicans and the Harrison family.

Patrick Kane of this city, who has recently been in charge of the Boston & Maine telegraph office at Ipswich, Mass., has been transferred to duty in this city as night operator in the Boston & Maine station, in place of Frank Hobbs, resigned.

To Save Life

Frequently requires prompt action, hour's delay waiting for the doctor may be attended with serious consequences, especially in cases of Croup, Pneumonia, and other throat and lung troubles. Hence, no family should be without a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has proved itself, in thousands of cases, the best Emergency Medicine ever discovered. It gives prompt relief and prepares the way for a thorough cure, which is certain to be effected by its continued use.

S. H. Latimer, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ga., says: "I have found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a perfect cure for Croup in all cases. I have known the worst cases relieved in a very short time by its use; and I advise all families to use it in sudden emergencies, for coughs, croup, &c."

A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middletown, Tenn., says: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," writes E. Bragdon, of Palestine, Texas, "believing as I do that, but for its use, I should long since have died."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires vigorous health, abundance of SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

GLYCEROLE!

A PRESERVATIVE OF LEATHER.

For Oiling and Dressing Boots, Shoes, Etc.

Ever since the now dispensable article of Shoe Dressing came into existence, it has been the source of constant trouble to parties using it, because it hardened and cracked the leather; to the dealer, because of the complaints of his customers. Conscientious Shoe Dealers have often dissuaded their patrons from using any Shoe Dressing whatever and advised the application of oil, as it is universally known that oil is the only preservative of leather, while all other substances harden, crack and destroy it.

It was claimed for most Dressings heretofore in use that they do not crack leather, but it has never before been claimed that an Oil Dressing could be produced, the composition of which was considered to be an impossibility. After years of patient work however, we have succeeded in solving the problem of producing an oil, which in addition to its softening and preserving qualities gives also an elegant lustre to leather goods.

Glycerole is a veritable oil and the only one in existence which answers the purpose of oiling, and at the same time, dressing leather. It is perfect in its composition, does not rub off or soil dresses or skirts, and imparts to worn goods a soft, oily lustre which positively preserves the leather and protects it from water.

We do not pretend that a single application of Glycerole will improve a shoe already dried and hardened by numerous coats of common shoe dressing, but we do warrant that all shoes oiled and dressed only with Glycerole will be positively improved in wearing quality, as the oil by penetrating into the pores of the leather will make it more supple and add to its durability.

HUNT'S REMEDY

RELIEVES the Kidneys;

SOLD UNIVERSALLY.

BILIOUSNESS.

This very common complaint, which is caused by a dormant or inactive liver, can be cured in a short time by using Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, as can also the various diseases arising from inactive liver or kidneys. These organs, if inactive, will allow impure blood to enter the heart, causing tightness about that organ and palpitation.

She suffered thirty years.

MRS. DUDLEY CHANDLER, of Melrose, Mass., says: "I had suffered with Palpitation of the Heart more than thirty years before I found anything to give me essential relief. Last fall I tried Ingalls' Mandrake Compound, and, remarkable as it was, this Compound relieved me in two days, so that for several months afterwards I felt not the slightest touch of it, and am perfectly free from it now. Sometimes, before I took this Compound, the pulsations of my heart were so violent as to shake my whole body with rapid agitations, and at times I fainted and became entirely insensible. Now I am perfectly free from all this suffering. Consequently I can most sincerely and earnestly recommend this Compound to all like sufferers, as pre-eminently the best medicine I ever knew for Palpitation of the Heart."

This Compound is purely Vegetable, and strengthens and builds up the system while it eradicates disease.

Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

Statistics Concerning Public Libraries.

Some library statistics show that the European country which possesses the largest number of public libraries is Austria. In Austria there are no fewer than 577 public libraries, containing 5,475,000—without reckoning maps and manuscripts—a total which comes out at 26 volumes per 100 of the population. France possesses 500 public libraries, containing 4,598,000 volumes and 135,000 manuscripts, or 12 volumes per 100 of the inhabitants, Italy ranking next with 493 libraries, 4,349,000 volumes and 330,000 manuscripts, or 16 volumes per 100. In Germany the public libraries number 398, containing 2,640,000 volumes and 58,000 manuscripts, or 11 volumes per 100 of the population. Great Britain possesses only 200 public libraries, according to these statistics, the volumes numbering 2,871,000 and the manuscripts 26,000. There are 145 libraries in Russia, with 952,000 volumes and 24,000 manuscripts, or a fraction over 1 volume to 100 persons.

It is noteworthy that in Bavaria alone the public libraries number 169, with 1,868,000 volumes and 24,000 manuscripts. Reviewing the principal libraries separately, it appears that the most considerable in Europe is the Bibliotheque Nationale, in Paris, with 2,078,000 volumes, while the British museum, with its millions of books, assumes the next place. Then comes the Munich Royal library, containing 800,000 volumes; the Berlin, Dresden and Vienna libraries taking rank as follows in the same order; 700,000, 500,000, and 420,000 volumes. The Oxford and Heidelberg universities each possess about 800,000 books. At the Vatican the manuscripts attain almost as large a total as the printed works. The latter number 30,000, while the manuscripts are returned at 25,000.—Home Journal.

English and American Kitchens.

A Philadelphia lady who has just returned from a long visit in London was recently discussing certain domestic points peculiar to England and comparing them with relative matters here. "We all know," she said, "as housekeepers, the worry we have if our kitchens are in the basement, though they have elevators and dumb waiters, stationary washtubs, hot and cold water, are carpeted and fitted with every conceivable convenience. In a London house the kitchens are always in the basement—no elevators, no washtubs, and by no means any 'frivolities' in the way of conveniences. But an English kitchen is a picture, nevertheless. The bright tins and coppers, the burnished dish covers ranged in sizes, the well stored cupboards, the many tables for every conceivable purpose, the range of the most perfect make and large size and the entire absence of the dirty part of the kitchen work, which is confined to the adjoining scullery, make a contrasting picture of aggravation to us, who, while we adore all these kitchen virtues, seldom arrive at them. Though our kitchens in Philadelphia be large and airy, our help, as a rule, are incapable of sustaining the dignity of an English cook, who is a person of dignity and respectability. We pay high wages, give great privileges and are not allowed to order our own dinners and, at any rate, are not expected to reorder the remains."—Philadelphia Press.

A Trick of Napoleon's Partisans.

Archbishop Whately, commenting upon the effects produced by rumors, mentions the great influence of one report which preceded Bonaparte's return from Elba.

When the return had been plotted, and just before it was executed, Napoleon's partisans went through France seeking land to purchase. When about to close the bargain for a field, they would ask to be shown the title.

If they found, as they generally did, that the field was land which had been confiscated at the Revolution, they broke off the negotiation at once. The title, they declared, was insecure; for the Bourbon government of Louis XVIII did not recognize the legality of the act of confiscation.

Their acts and words spread throughout France the rumor that the Bourbons meditated the resumption of all these lands—the chief part of France—to restore them to the former owners. The rumor, thus artfully started and spread abroad, caused thousands of peasant proprietors to welcome Napoleon's return, because thereby the downfall of the Bourbons would occur.—Youth's Companion.

Pity the Poor Woman.

A State street physician gives it as his opinion that four-fifths of the earnings of his profession are derived from women, though in this estimate he does not include the very large and prosperous class of specialists whose services are required by men only. It is a sad commentary upon the morals of the community the existence and prosperity of hundreds of such specialists for men, and the picture is less encouraging on the other side, where so many women with health impaired by foolish dressing, improper diet and violations of the laws of nature, maintain an army of medical practitioners. It is only among civilized peoples that women are less healthful than men. Let doctors and the common surmise tell why this is so. The fact remains that there may be seen on the streets of Chicago twenty strong, handsome men above the age of 30 to one woman. The woman who is able to retain her youthful comeliness beyond 30 is the exception. Good looking men of middle or even advanced age are as common as flagstones, while a handsome matron is almost a curiosity.—Chicago Herald.

Pastel Painting in England.

Pastel painting is once more finding patrons in England. The splendid portraits which Alfred Stevens lately exhibited in Brussels were enough to make fashionable people eager to revive the art. In Paris there is a society of pastel painters. One of the members, M. Lacaze, has discovered a process by which permanency is insured to the colors, and it has received the official approval of the society. Hitherto a fixing process has always diminished the beauty of the colors, and hence pastel painting, having to depend on the crayons alone, was restricted to countries where there are fewer atmospheric changes than in England.—Home Journal.

A Plausible Explanation.

Horse Flesh in Paris.

The inspector of butcheries at Paris has just published a report on the sale of horse flesh in the French capital. It appears the consumption of this meat, in a more or less concealed form, has increased to an extraordinary extent.—Home Journal.

The postoffice at Atlantic City, N. J., was burglarized on the night of July 31st the safe blown open, and $1200 in two cent stamps and $200 in cash stolen. Registered mail matter was rifled, and a small sum extracted. The postoffice adjoins the police headquarters, and officers were on duty within twenty-five feet.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachael's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

A SNOWSTORM.

Deformed by tempests, the sweet blue
Is drowned in clouds of fleecy spray;
On, on, in ranks forever new,
Forever maddening in their play.

Above, the driving storm; below,
The earth is fashioned at its will;
Its chisel carves the yielding snow
To forms beyond all human skill.

But we, warm nested, in the heart
Of this dim elemental war,
Sit calmly tranquil, or but start
When rocks the pane with stormier jar.

We look into each other's eyes,
And see a friendly peace which says,
While on the snowy Cossack flies,
"Rave ye without, here quiet stays."

This silent, unexpressed delight
Grows brighter so severely set;
Heart warm against the snowy white,
The rose of joy burns warmer yet.

Our kindling of the soul can make
Those wintry tumults disappear,
And all their dreariness partake
Its own illumined atmosphere.

—Thomas Gold Appleton.

Protecting Theatres from Fire.

As a precaution against fire, some scenery at one of the Brussels theatres was coated two years ago with a composition largely consisting of alum and asbestos. Recent experiments with the scenery so prepared demonstrate that the canvas can thus be rendered perfectly incombustible. It is said that this simple application does not interfere in any way with the material upon which the scenes are painted, nor does it have any prejudicial effect upon the colors employed.—Chicago Times.

In the Amusing Comedietta Of "Used Up."

Sir Charles Coldstream, a blase man of fashion, is made to deprecate everything in which everybody else is supposed to take an interest, with the languid remark that "there is really nothing in it." He even extended the criticism to the crater of Vesuvius, down which he looked but saw "nothing in it." Such characters are scarcer on this side of the Atlantic than abroad, but they exist here notwithstanding. Such men need a "fillip to nature" to medicinally stimulate their jaded appetite, overcome their lassitude, and renew the zest of existence. They and others upon whom the world's enjoyments are beginning prematurely to pall, will find in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a welcome and speedy renewal of vigor and health. Appetite returns, dyspeptic and bilious symptoms disappear, the nerves grow strong, and the hour of retirement is unfraught with apprehension of uneasy repose when this superlative tonic is employed. It remedies fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Germany's Sepulchral Stoves.

The German houses are entirely wanting in the comfortable warmth we are accustomed to in America. Their sepulchral, white porcelain stoves, twelve feet or so high, dispense almost as little heat as cheer. Solemnly erected in the corners of the rooms, they present an aspect that (when one is in a homesick mood) is remarkably dispiriting, and often they produce the same effect on one's spirits as would the near neighborhood of the monuments and gravestones they so strongly resemble. But the bed furnishing is as oppressively warm as the heat of the white, ghostly stoves is insufficient. The great eider down quilts, that always form the outside coverings, are as thick and heavy as feather beds. Beside the sweltering heat that these produce, there cannot but be the suggestion that very likely they may already have done duty for several generations. But those who have always lived in a country of vulgar progress probably do not appreciate the conditions of living in a land where aristocratic conservatism prevails. It is not at all likely that houses in Germany will be warmed by steam pipes or furnaces, or anything but their colossal white stoves, for several hundred years yet.—Hanover Cor. Boston Herald.

Ice Sailing with Skates.

Ice sailing is the latest amusement to take here, and it has become very popular. I do not mean with boats, but with skates. The skater crosses two sticks binds him and covers them with canvas, making the whole about six feet by one or two in extent. He places this sail against his back and runs his arms through the sticks so as to hold it. With a good wind he can go twenty miles an hour over smooth ice, and he can tack and beat against the wind, just as in sailing a boat. There is a ten mile surface at Creve Cœur lake that offers elegant sport. It is very exciting, but it requires some daring to start in, as the rapidity of the skater is apt to terrify the man who has never tried it. In skating with the wind one's eyes water, but one can see quite well enough to avoid holes. There would be little chance of being saved if you did blow in. However, it is an easy thing to blow across a three foot hole in going at a high rate of speed. It is very exciting sport, and require very little practice to master its intricacies. It requires comparatively smooth ice for good skating. If an obstruction is met with your fall is pretty hard.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Men Wearing Varied Colors Again.

Gentlemen are slowly but surely drifting back to those days when light and fantastic colors were necessary to a handsome and well ordered toilet. The ladies are no longer to monopolize the gay hues with which the rainbow is decorated. In the animal kingdom the gentleman member of the family generally puts on the plumage or wealth of hair and fur. For proof, behold the lion and the gold or silver pheasant. I say gentlemen are slowly but surely drifting back to those days of blue silk coats, yellow vests, green knee breeches, lace collars and wristlets, etc. Don't you believe it? Examine any new tailor made suit and see if a pair of trousers are ever made up nowadays without a gay colored piece of V shaped silk inserted and joining the waistband in the back. A finical gentleman would not wear trousers that did not have this literally entering wedge. The crimson necktie is already the proper caper. These colors are bound to widen and lengthen until they cover the form of creation's lord.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

The Babies of Japan.

The little baby is not offered its natural nourishment for three days. During this time the liquor of boiled rice is fed to it! And it is not tucked daintily up in soft white blankets in its clean little bed, but set up in a small tub and covered with coarse, dark comforts. The only relief it has during its infancy from this uncomfortable position is when it is put on its mother's or some else's back, inside their clothes, and taken out for an airing. It is claimed by the more enlightened now that this constant sitting position, or being crowded against some one, with shoulders thrown forward and chest pressed in, is one reason why almost all Japanese are so extremely narrow-chested. It is anything but pleasant to see a 3-year-old strapped on the back of a 4-year-old, with head (shaven, of course,) thrown way over to one side, the unhappy little victim fast asleep with the hot sun streaming on it, and flies feasting on the dirt which is almost invariably part of a Japanese baby's face.—Babyhood.

People of Alaska.

Governor Swineford says in his annual report that there are 39,600 people in Alaska. Of these, 27,500 are uncivilized natives, 2,750 civilized natives, 800 Aleuts, 1,800 creoles and 5,000 whites. The year was regarded as an exceptionally bad one in regard to temperature, but the enthusiastic governor, who was acclimated in the northern peninsula of Michigan, says that he has not changed his opinion as to the general salubrity and mildness of the climate. And this seems to be borne out by the statistics of meteorology, for it cannot be said that a climate which ranges from 3 degs. below to 77 degs. above is harshly cold or scorching in its heats.—New York Mail and Express.

Red Wood for Veneering.

Veneer manufacturers having been put to much trouble and expense to secure from the natives of Persia or from French markets, even, fancy wood burls from which to carve out veneers for manufacturing purposes, have demonstrated by recent experiments that red wood stumps possess meritorious qualities for such use, and will undoubtedly be substituted for the more costly woods in the future. The demand for burl and curly red wood for finishing work has already reached large proportions in the west. The large butts of trees now being slain in California forests will be used to a great extent.—New York Sun.

Table Decoration.

A Paris letter says the latest agony in silver table decoration is a very large platter with a swan at one end. On this coffee cups are served, with a cream jug and sugar bowl. The swan, with its outstretched wings and curved neck, is in reality a coffee pot. It is an old Louis XV conceit.—Chicago Herald.

COFFEE, TEA, MILK, SUGAR.

A Brief Chapter on Food and Its Adulterations.

"A cup of coffee," says Alexandre Dumas, the elder—who, by the way, was as great a gourmand as he was romancist—"a cup of coffee is the review of the dinner." M. Dumas was right. Of all the food adulterations that of coffee is the most palpable. Not only is the roasted and ground article adulterated, but—incredible as it may sound—the green bean is imitated from common clay, colored with arsenic. If rumor has it correct, there is a green coffee manufactory in Chicago, where nature is "corrected" by machinery. Mechanical appliances mold, press and dry Cook county clay into coffee beans, as it is said, at a cost of about eight cents a pound. Of course, this artificial coffee cannot be used in its purity, or rather impurity. It is used to mix with the genuine article, and, strange as it may sound, the clay bean assumes the same color in roasting that the natural bean does.

Coffee roasters all over the land admit that they use stale bread in roasting coffee. The bread is freed from its crust and then cut into small cubes. The roasters claim that the presence of this bread during the process of the roasting improves the coffee. Of course, if the latter is sold in the bean it is impossible to make the customer pay for stale bread, but if ground the bread becomes part of the coffee. Think of M. Dumas' glowing tribute to the after dinner cup, and then imagine a compound made up as follows; Chicory, peas, beans, date stones, biscuits, figs, roasted hominy, burned sugar, acorns, mangel-wurzel, dandelion, turnips, parsnips, carrots, rye and potato flour.

The introduction of chicory into coffee is defended by many roasters on the ground that it really improves the coffee and does no mischief to the drinker. But Dr. Hassell, a German authority, says that chicory in prolonged use is injurious to health. He claims that the root—belonging to the class of radishes, by the way—produces heartburn, cramp in the stomach, loss of appetite, acidity in the mouth, constipation with intermittent diarrhœa, weakness of the limbs, trembling, sleeplessness, and a drunken cloudiness of the senses. Professor Beer, the famous Vienna oculist, goes so far as to claim that chicory in large doses produces blindness.

The adulteration of teas are even worse than those of coffees. The practice of using exhausted tea leaves is so well known as scarcely to bear mention. These exhausted leaves are "faced," or colored, and fixed up with plumbago, gum, indigo, Prussian blue, turmeric, China clay, mica, soapstone or French chalk, sulphate of lime, rose pink, Venetian red, carbonate of copper, arsenite of copper, chromate and bi-chromate of potash and carbonate of lime and magnesia. Other substitutes for the genuine article are leaves of the elder, willow, aloe and other plants and trees, lye tea, paddy husk, sweeping of tea house floors, sand, quartz, starch and magnetic oxide of iron.

The most dangerous of all food swindling practices is that which lowers the nutritive quality of milk. Its direct effect is largely upon infants and small children. It is the opinion of the ablest medical observers that half of the infant mortality in cities is due to sophisticated milk. Professor Wiley, of the United States department of agriculture, asserts that "it is doubtful whether 10 per cent. of the milk which reaches the table is pure." The principal adulterant of milk in these modern times is water. The cream is skimmed and water is added to restore the bulk and weight. The color is restored by coloring matter. Flour or starch, boiled white carrots, milk of almonds, sheeps' brains, gum tragacanth, carbonate of soda and chrome yellow also enter into milk as adulterants.

There is practically no limit to the adulteration of sugar. Cane sugar is manufactured from grape or starch glucose, wheat and potato flour, tapioca starch, blood, pipe clay, marble dust, gypsum, bone dust, lead, iron, lime and sand. The confectionery sugar consists of glucose, terra alba, chalk, arrowroot, sand, wheat and potato flour, and hydrated sulphate of lime. These articles are colored, as the case may require, by cochineal, indigo and Prussian blue, carbonates of copper and lead, white lead, vermillion, gamboge, chromates of lead, sap green, arsenite of copper, Indian red, umber, sienna, Vandyke brown, cobalt, smalt, Naples yellow, bisulphate of mercury, sulphate of arsenicum, bronze powders or alloys of copper and zinc.

Speaking upon the law concerning adulterants, Manager Robert M. Floyd remarked: "The English have dealt with the question of food adulteration very intelligently, and, as experience has shown, very profitably to the empire. Adulteration of food had grown to enormous dimensions some years ago in England. A parliamentary commission reported that scarcely an article that was served on the table was free from fraudulent admixture or was what it pretended to be. The result was the passage of an act of a simple and comprehensive nature, which required that all manufactured articles of food should be labeled with a statement of all their ingredients, fraud, upon detection, being punished with extreme severity. If coffee contained chicory the manufacturer and seller must make this fact distinctly known. The proportion of corn starch employed in tempering mustard, and incidentally expanding its bulk, must be stated. And so through the long list of comestibles and condiments the law enforces perfect candor between buyer and seller. The effect of this legislation was to purify the trade and then to bring it to unprecedented proportions. The reason why Great Britain has a monopoly, or something very like it, in the condiment trade of the world, is because her great houses guarantee purity."—Chicago Herald.

Celluloid for Sheathing Ships.

In experiments during the past year, celluloid has proven an excellent sheathing for ships, in place of copper, over which it has some advantages. Another application of a valuable material is the use of the lately cheapened aluminum for dental plates, which are better than rubber, and cheaper and stronger than gold. —Arkansaw Traveler.

Fiery Horror in New York.

A six-story death-trap on the Bowery, New York, occupied by four tailoring shops in the wholesale cloak manufacture, and as a tenement house, took fire Aug. 3d. The building swarmed with people, of whom three women, two children and fifteen men were burned to death, ten others being badly injured, and two men missing. Of the injured, two women and one man will die, and probably others; and it is not believed that the worst is yet known. All the unfortunates were Polish Jews. The total property loss will not exceed $10,000.

THE GREAT DIAMOND FRAUD.

Making a Million Out of a Mine Which Had no Existence.

Among the many schemes to which the great banker, Ralston, who loved to be called the financial king of the Pacific coast, devoted no small share of the California bank, of which he was president was the exploiting of mines in the Pinal range of mountains close to the boundary line which divides Arizona from Northern Mexico. This was in the early seventies, when speculation was rife, and there were many of bonanzas an every day occurrence among the employes of Ralston in Comstock mines was one George Arnold, a man of meager education, but bright and ambitious. In his shanty on the western mountain side he was ever dreaming of some plan that would bring Dame Fortune to his feet. While yet dreaming of the dream of wealth there came to him the bright colored story of the great diamond discoveries at Cape Colony. His brain at once devised a scheme which, in its way, equaled Law's South Sea bubble.

The alleged found the Pyramid district was rich in color and had character enough to inaugurate any mining scheme, however wild and impracticable. So with a comrade, Jim Haggerty, with whom he had long been associated, Arnold made long tours over the surrounding country. After a few weeks of this kind of work he resigned his place in the mines, with the given intention of seeking the fairer fields of Mexico.

He next turned up in San Francisco in the fall of 1871. He immediately found Ralston, and even astonished that bold operator by revealing that he had discovered in Arizona rich diamond fields quite as extensive as those of Cape Colony. From the grip sack he had brought with him he poured forth a wondrous display of rough diamonds which had been washed from the yielding soil of the new find. They were many and apparently of value.

Ralston, ever ready for a venture, especially one which promised such dazzling results, entered at once into a proposed exploration of the new diamond fields. He introduced Arnold to several leading capitalists, who at once became enthusiastic over the new Golconda. With the rapid action peculiar to Californians, the clique who had been let into the secret immediately determined to visit the mines, and, if found to be all right, to purchase Arnold's claim and title for the sum of $1,000,000. Arnold reluctantly accepted the offer.

On their return to San Francisco the capitalists wished to form a company. In ten days it was accomplished. Arnold was paid his $1,000,000 and made superintendent of the new mines. He at once make known the location of the diamond fields, and they were visited by several stockholders in the company. Diamonds were found by each and all of them, and all went merry as a marriage bell until Arnold skipped for the east.

It was then thought best to call in an expert, and Professor King, the well known geologist, was selected. He first discovered that the ground around the clump of trees on the bank of the Rio Prieto had been cleverly "salted" with refuse diamonds, such as may be cheaply bought in the marts of Amsterdam. It was also seen that the diamonds found by the capitalists had been "salted" at Amsterdam, and, as Professor King said, "while diamonds may exist in Arizona, it is hardly to be expected that nature will produce them partly cut or polished."

The members of the new diamond company were both thunderstruck and indignant, and steps were quickly taken to bring Arnold to justice. He was at his home in his native Kentucky, and the machinery of the law was brought to bear upon him there. He was arrested, but never taken out of the blue grass country for punishment. In some manner he secured his release, and entered upon a life of wild enjoyment. His excesses were of short duration, and in less five years of feasting and rioting with ill-gotten wealth, he died.—Providence Press.

A Steel Cable in China.

A remarkable engineering feat has just been carried out in China in the face of unusual physical obstacles. This was the stretching of a steel cable of seven strands across the Luan river by Mr. A. de Linde, a Danish engineer, aided only by unskilled Chinese labor. The cable is strung from two points 4,649 feet apart. The height of one support is 447 feet above the present level of the river and the second support 787 feet above it. The vertex over the water is seventy-eight feet. The Chinese cable is the longest but one in the world. The telegraph air cable across the Kistna has a span of 5,070 feet; two similar cables cross the Ganges, one 2,900 and the other 2,830 feet. A third line of 1,185 feet crosses the Hooghly, and in the United States there is one over the Missouri of 2,000 feet.—Indian Engineering.

Fish Frozen for Shipment.

Frozen fish are imported into Marseilles by a society formed for the purpose. A steamer lately brought there some thirty-six tons of frozen fish in its hold, the temperature of which had been kept at the freezing point by means of a machine evaporating sulphuric acid. The fish are caught with the net in various parts of the Mediterranean and Atlantic. After arrival they are dispatched by night in a cold chamber. Experiment has shown that fish can be kept seven or eight months at low temperature without the least change.—Boston Transcript.

Sweets from the Beet.

By means of improved appliances the Germans are now able to extract 11.31 per cent. of beet sugar and 0.69 per cent. of molasses, or a total of 11.96 pounds per 100 pounds of beets. The cost of this sugar is only 2 per cents per pound. The sugar is produced in enormous quantities, sufficient for the home supply and a large export trade.—Boston Budget.

Sparrows Wanted.

The agricultural department at Washington has sent an order for 100 sparrows to Mr. Hill, a professional bird catcher at Indianapolis, for the use of the "economic ornithological bureau," for "scientific purposes." Within a little over a year Mr. Hill has caught about 44,000 sparrows.—Chicago News.

Another New England League club has gone to pieces, the Salema having disbanded on Saturday; cause, lack of support. The club has played good ball, and at the time of collapse stood a good second in the contest for the league pennant, having on Friday defeated the Portsmouth club, fourteen to nine, on the Salem grounds. An attempt was made to get a stock company to take the franchise of the Salems, but it was unavailing.

PEARLINE has no equal for all purposes for which soap is used. It is the greatest known economizer of time, drudgery, and wear and tear in washing and cleaning.

MILLIONS of packages of Pearline are consumed annually, by economical, intelligent housekeepers—women who are quick to embrace modern labor-saving ideas; or, not doing the work themselves, are bright enough to supply their servants with Pearline. They get the best possible results, and have fewer backaches and complaints. Their clothes and paint wear longer because they are not rubbed to pieces.

Beware of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them.

Pearline sells on its merits, and is never peddled.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation, curative power superior to any other article. A Boston lady who knew what she wanted, and whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below:

To Get

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I knew what Hood's Sarsaparilla was. I had taken it, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other.

Hood's

When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable, suffering a great deal with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly stand. I looked, and had for some time, like a person in consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I wonder at myself sometimes, and my friends frequently speak of it." MRS. ELLA A. GOFF, 61 Terrace Street, Boston.

NOMINATIONS.

REPUBLICAN—WARD FOUR.

At the republican caucus in ward four, on the evening of the 4th inst., the following nominations were made:

Aldermen, Joshua M. Vaughan, Elvin Newton;

Councilmen, William S. Jackson, Gilman B. Randall, John O. Conner, Caleb N. Lord;

Assessors, Almon Jenness, Mark Jenkins;

Overseer of Poor, Sherman Newton.

Delegates to the several conventions were chosen as follows:

State, Wm. H. Rollins, Elvin Newton;

Congressional, John O. Ayers, John W. Davis;

County, George M. Ayers, Allen A. Rand;

Senatorial, Chandler M. Hayford, William J. Doyle.

The republican mayoralty caucus was held in the court house on Saturday afternoon from four o'clock to eight, and Henry A. Yeaton was unanimously nominated to be supported at the polls on Tuesday, the 7th.

YACHT RACE.

The second annual race from Annisquam point, Cape Ann, around White Island, Isles of Shoals, and return, was sailed last Saturday, the Gracie, Climax, Hazard, Black Cloud, Evelyn, Mignon, Kalinda and Trudette crossing the line in the order named, the start being made at eight o'clock A. M. with a stiff breeze from the southwest, which however soon fell light, putting the Mignon at a big disadvantage, she having just before the start sent ashore her topmast and spinnaker pole. The Kalinda soon dropped out of the race, owing to fouling her spinnaker; the others rounded White Island in the following order: Black Cloud, Hazard, Evelyn, Gracie, Trudette, Mignon and Climax, the Black Cloud being eighteen minutes ahead of the Climax. The home stretch was a dead beat all the way, and the yachts finished in the following order: Black Cloud, Hazard,

NEW HAMPSHIRE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Part Four of the Proceedings of the New Hampshire Historical Society has just been issued. This completes a volume from 1884 to 1888. It contains the valuable and instructive address of the late Charles W. Tuttle, delivered in this city December 29, 1880, upon the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Royal Provincial government of New Hampshire. We find also a paper read October 7, 1874, by John Albee, upon the early records of New Castle, the substance of which the writer at a later date used in preparing his interesting History of New Castle.

The following names of Portsmouth residents appear in the list of resident members of the society in June, 1888:

Alfred Elwyn, Frank W. Hackett, Wallace Hackett, William H. Hackett, Alexander H. Ladd, Francis E. Langdon, William H. Rollins, T. Salter Tredick, Joseph B. Upham, Mark H. Wentworth, Andrew H. Young.

LAWN TENNIS.

The tournament closed on the 3d inst. In the close of the second round of doubles, Campbell and McMullen beat Weeden and Hoppin, 6—0, 6—4.

In the finals, doubles, Sears and Shaw beat Campbell and McMullen by default.

In the finals, singles, Chase beat Campbell, 6—3, 7—5, 4—6, 4—6, 6—3.

For second prize in singles, Campbell beat Hoppin, Wright, Slocum and Lee, by default.

For second prize in doubles, Lee and Tallant beat Mansfield and Wright, 1—6, 9—7, 6—3.

The defaulting for second prize in singles was due to the fact that Campbell had sprained his ankle in a previous game, and the other contestents with gentlemanly courtesy declined to compete with him.

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL.

There has recently been issued a catalogue of the students at the Law School of Harvard university, which extends from 1817 to 1887. The class of 1817 consisted of just one young man, all by himself. The whole number of students, including the year 1887, is 5263. The following is a list of students entered from Portsmouth, with the year appended of their leaving the school:

In 1820, Charles William Cutter; 1821, John Langdon Elwyn; 1822, Luke Woodbury; 1832, Henry Waldron; 1835, Geo. Wallis Haven; 1836, Charles Chauncey Shackford; 1842, William Henry Rollins; 1845, William Henry Fowler; 1848, John Scribner Jenness; 1856, Edwin Nathaniel Mathes; 1862, John Pearse Treadwell; 1865, Frank Goodwin; 1866, Frank Warren Hackett; 1879, Wallace Hackett.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Dickey of Middle street, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Dickey, starts this week on a voyage by sailing ship to the Azores.

Woodbury Langdon of New York is visiting his brother, Hon. Francis E. Langdon, at the Langdon mansion on Pleasant street.

Mrs. Everett, wife of Lieut. W. H. Everett of the navy, has returned from Newport, and is at her father's, Col. Hackett's, on Middle street.

Rev. A. P. Peabody, D. D., preached at the sea side in York on Sunday.

George Lowe, Bertie Wallace and Clarance Smart are camping out in Burnt woods, Seavy's creek, Rye, for a couple of weeks. Willie Norton and Clinton Humphries also have a tent pitched at the same place.

Misses Nellie and May McGuirk, of Providence, R. I., are guests of their uncle, Mr. George Stott, in this city.

A. J. Cilley and wife, of Kingston, are visiting relatives in this city.

Miss Lettie Lydston of this city is visiting her sister, Mrs. Charles Mason of East Haverhill, Mass.

Mr. John W. Green of Lynn, Mass., formerly of this city, passed through here on Sunday, on his way to the Shoals,

Mrs. Mary A. Ridge of this city, widow of Thomas W. Ridge, has been granted a pension.

ACCIDENTAL.

Mr. George P. Abbott fell a distance of twelve feet at Borthwick's store on Market street, Saturday afternoon, and dislocated one of his shoulders, which was set by Dr. Potter. Although suffering somewhat in consequence of the accident, he is improving, and we hope no permanent inconvenience will result from what might have been a serious mishap.

Two young men in a small row boat, in attempting to shift seats Sunday afternoon off Badger's island, capsized the boat, creating quite a sensation on the wharves. They were picked up by a boat from a schooner, and their boat towed ashore.

MARITIME NOTES.

The steamer Oceanic took a very large crowd to the Shoals on Sunday.

The steamer Cocheco towed two brick schooners down river Sunday afternoon, and out to sea.

The steamer Minnesota, with about 100 passengers from Lynn, including fifteen ladies, made a trip to this port on Sun- steam collier were at the north-end wharves last Friday afternoon.

Mr. Charles S. Drowne's little sloop yacht White Wing is being fitted for sword fishing, and will be manned by a Newcastle crew.

The schooner yacht Wm H. Russell took a party of the newspaper men and printers of the city on a trip outside the harbor on the 5th inst.

The big timber raft passed St. John, N. B., at daylight on the 2d inst., in tow of tugs Underwriter and Ocean King. The tugs were taking it along at a good rate. On the 3d, at noon, the raft was sighted from the top of Green mountain, Mt. Desert island, being then about five miles inside of Mt. Desert rock, which is eighteen miles distant from the island, and was making an apparent headway of about four miles an hour, the two tugs being towing, one ahead of the other, of course. The steamer Olivette passed the raft about ten o'clock at night on the 3d, eight miles north by east from Matinicus; the wind was blowing fresh from the southwest, but the tugs were taking the lumbering tow along about five miles an hour.

Fine Bath Sponges at Preston's.

Saturday night was the most uncomfortable hight of the season, up to that time.

Over 700 persons dined at the hotel Wentworth on Thursday last, and over 600 on Friday—the largest numbers fed there on any two days since the hotel was opened.

The whooping cough is very prevalent among the old people of this city.

By cutting an arch between the dining room and restaurant hall at the Boston & Maine railroad station in this city, great improvement results. Both rooms are lighter and better ventilated. The long waits between the time some of the trains arrive from York beach and the departure of some of the trains for Concord, suggests the lack of the conveniences and comforts of proper waiting rooms at this station.

The Concord railroad pay train was in this city on Saturday.

The trains on the Eastern division of the Boston & Maine railroad on Saturday were exceedingly heavy. It was the occasion of the exodus of an army of summer tourists.

Come now, Major. Let us have that crossing from the academy to the head of Bridge street. Don't wait to have it voted by another board, but set the men about it at once. It is only a little job, and a day will complete it.

Let it not be supposed that every one who goes to the beach is happy. Passengers from the interior are loud and liberal in their criticisms of the poor connection of trains over the Concord road with trains to and from York. The York railroad brings lots of grist to the Concord mill.

A gentleman of Kittery, hitherto a democrat, who was in this city on Saturday, reports the democrats of that town as "very sour."

Don't Wait
Until your hair becomes dry, thin, and gray before giving the attention needed to preserve its beauty and vitality. Keep on your toilet-table a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor—the only dressing you require for the hair—and use a little, daily, to preserve the natural color and prevent baldness.

Thomas Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky., writes: "Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. Tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best hair-restorer in the world."

"My hair was faded and dry," writes Mabel C. Hardy, of Delavan, Ill.; "but after using a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it became black and glossy."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinance, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

SANFORD'S GINGER,

The Delicious Summer Medicine.

OH, WHAT A COLD!

This is the season for sudden changes in the weather and a great many take cold rather in their Head or on their Lungs, causing Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. These troubles can be soon relieved and cured by taking Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific, which acts directly on the Throat and Lungs, entirely removing these difficulties.

Cured his boy of Croup.

C. T. Brooks Lowell, Mass., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific as a cure for Coughs, Colds and Croup. I used it in my family last winter with the best results. Two or three doses cured my little boy of Croup, for which I am very thankful."

You can cure that Cough in a short time. You can cure your Catarrh if you persist in its use, as it will stop the secretion of Catarrhal matter in the head; it will relieve Croup in from three to five minutes.

"The best medicine for Coughs and Consumptive Complaints that ever I saw is Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific," so says JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of Boston.

WINTER LIFE IN DAKOTA.

Description of the Method of Constructing Sod Houses on the Prairie.

"I was at the house of an old Scotchman a year or two ago," said an old Dakotan. "Several of us young people were sitting at the table in the living room playing cards. Outside a blizzard was howling. The old man said:

"'I think I will go out to the sheds and see how the stock are.'

"'Don't you go,' I replied.

"'I guess I will.'

"I looked over my shoulder and said: 'See here, old man, don't you try that; you stay right here.' You may think this was considerable fuss to make, as the sheds were not over four rods from the house; but I had become acquainted with winter weather on the prairies. We went on with our game and nothing more was said. About ten minutes later I looked up and the old man was gone. 'Did your father go out?' I asked one of the girls. 'Yes,' she replied, 'and I don't see what keeps him. I wish you would go out and find him.'

"I wrapped up and started out, first taking the precaution to take one end of a rope, which I trailed after me. About half way between the sheds and the house I found the old man on his hands and knees in the snow, which was seven feet deep, crawling about, trying to find the house. He was then nearly dead, and ten minutes more would have finished him. I picked him up, and carried him to the house, where with snow, ice water, and whisky, supplemented with an hour or two of hard work, we managed to save his life."

"How do people manage to live in such a climate?"

"Live? Why, they prepare for it. The early comers generally put up sod houses, and there is nothing in the world so warm as a sod house. You can walk around barefoot on the floor of one, if properly constructed, in the coldest weather. After they have been there long enough settlers generally build log houses, hauling logs thirty or forty miles for the purpose. These houses are warm and comfortable. So long as you don't have to go out you don't know what winter is. But the sod house is not to be treated with disdain, I assure you."

"How are they built?"

"In the first place a frame of boards, the size the house is to be, is put up so as to give the house a nice appearance inside; the roof also is boarded over. Then the sod is cut with a plow, and a bank three or four feet thick is raised all around this frame. Every sod is laid as carefully as a mason lays a brick, the roots up, and all openings are filled in with fine dirt. Openings are made for the windows and doors, which have frames extending from inside to outside. These will contain sometimes three windows for winter—always two. When the sod rampart is raised to the height of the roof, poles are laid on and then sod put over those. The roots hold everything firm. You would be surprised to see the roots. Some of those grass roots are as thick as my finger, and extend down from from ten to fourteen feet."

"What?"

"It's a fact, I assure you. I have followed them down myself when digging wells in that blue joint grass land. Why, a man in plowing has to stop and sharpen his plow every eighty rods if he cares anything for his team. The blacksmith draws out the point, but that and the edge both have to be filed down as sharp as possible, and then, as I say, sharpened every eighty rods. But to return to the sod house. After the outside is completed the inside is finished up to suit the taste and pocket of the proprietor. Some have only the earthen floor, and others have a board floor, and are divided up into two or three rooms. And, I tell you, for winter comfort in Dakota a sod house beats them all. Besides these, there are dugouts on the side of a hill, and occasionally you will meet one on the prairie. The class of settlers that come in there as a rule have to put up with almost everything the first year or two."—Milwaukee Cor. Chicago Times.

The Contribution Boxes.

There need be no fear but that those who want to "pay for their religion," as some like to put it, will be given opportunity to do so. The man who wants to help pay for the preaching of the gospel doesn't need to have a pesky contribution box slid gracefully along under his nose every time he attends service. Nor is there any reason why the amount of money—usually so small—which is taken every Sabbath, in the morning and evening collections, may not be contributed in some other and less awkwardly conspicuous manner. There are many ways in which people can be led to understand that if they wish to contribute they can do so in a quiet and unostentatious way, and there is no doubt whatever but that those who want to give will find a way.—American Magazine.

Electric Light Buoys.

The lighthouse board is about to undertake experiments which will have an important bearing on the lighting of dangerous points in our rivers and harbors. It is nothing less than the lighting of buoys by electricity. The method at present in use for illuminating buoys consists in supplying them with oil or gas. With both of these it is necessary to replenish the source of illumination periodically, and this means additional trouble and expense. Besides, in most cases, the buoy is allowed to remain constantly lighted, as it is not visited daily. Hence it appears that the electric light is especially adapted to this purpose, as it requires no attention whatever and is under control at all times.—New Orleans Picayune.

Endurance of an Eskimo.

A medicine man of the tribe, in order to prepare for himself a drum or drumhead to accompany his peculiar religious rites, has been known to take a reindeer skin, soak it in the water until the hair was loose, and when it was frozen as stiff as a board place the pleasant thing against the bare skin of his body until it was thawed out and then hold it there an hour or two until it was dry as a bone. There is little wonder that such people need no seal or walrus oil to warm their habitations of snow. The only singular thing is that they do not sleep out of doors all winter to prevent being overcome by the heat in the snow houses.—Frederick Schwatka.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? A GEM OF THE HEART.

Joy met Sorrow in a place
Where the branches interlace,
Very secret, still, and sweet,
Safe from all profaning feet.
"Why art here?" Joy, startled, cried;
"Why art here?" Gray Sorrow sighed.

"I came here to weep," said Joy,
"Tears are ever my employ,"
Murmured Sorrow. "Yet I see
Tears as grateful were to thee.
Come, young novice, and be taught
How to ease thy heart o'er fraught."

Joy sat down at Sorrow's feet,
And was taught a lesson sweet.
Fain would he make kind return;
"Sorrow, art too old to learn!
Nay! Then tarry yet awhile,
Till I have taught thee how to smile."

Since that hour the two have been Bound as by mysterious kin;
Since that hour they so exchange
Tears and smiles, 'tis nothing strange
If sometimes a puzzled heart
Scarcely can tell the twain apart.
—Edith M. Thomas.

Novel Defensive Weapon.

A novel weapon of defense has been found in the ruined pueblos of Arizona. In the doorways of several Los Muertos rooms the Heminway expedition has found many huge defensive stones. These stones are ponderous masses of volcanic rock, rather handsome in shape, but destructive in design. The upper end tapers to a sort of handle. The stone was suspended in the doorway by a buckskin thong, which was fastened to the ring or handle. The method of using it was extremely simple. By holding it back and then letting it fly a file of men could be hewn down.—Chicago News.

Breach of promise suits are now called "white mailing attacks."

In the Amusing Comedietta Of "Used Up,"

Sir Charles Coldstream, a blase man of fashion, is made to deprecate everything in which everybody else is supposed to take an interest, with the languid remark that "there is really nothing in it." He even extended the criticism to the crater of Vesuvius, down which he looked but saw "nothing in it." Such characters are scarcer on this side of the Atlantic than abroad, but they exist here notwithstanding. Such men need a "fillip to nature" to medicinally stimulate their jaded appetite, overcome their lassitude, and renew the zest of existence. They and others upon whom the world's enjoyments are beginning prematurely to pall, will find in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a welcome and speedy renewal of vigor and health. Appetite returns, dyspeptic and billious symptoms disappear, the nerves grow strong, and the hour of retirement is unfraught with apprehension of uneasy repose when this superlative tonic is employed. It remedies fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

THE MANILA POLICE.

Guardians of the Law on the Philippine Islands—Fire Department.

A private letter from Mr. Alexander R. Webb, now United States consul to Manila, Philippine islands, to a friend in St. Louis is full of interesting gossip about the people and costumes at his post of duty. His description of the police and fire department of Manila is graphic and amusing.

The Manila "copper" is a thing of picturesque beauty, if not a joy forever. "The coat and pants are of navy blue, with fancy decoration in red and white, and heavy white cords with silver pendants, festooned from the left shoulder to the breast and looped around under the arm. The hat is a pure white helmet, with a silver knob on top, the royal arms in silver in front and a heavy silver curb chain running half way around it and hanging pendant from a hook at the back. They carry no club, but instead are armed with navy revolvers and a knife two and one-half inches wide and eighteen inches long. The handle is of brass, and there is usually a tuft of red plush at the hilt. This weapon, which rests in a brass tipped black leather sheath, looks like an extra large cheese knife with an ornamental handle. I am told that one edge is kept as sharp as a razor. Both weapons are worn in plain sight at all times, attached to a black leather belt. This is the day uniform.

"The night force goes on duty barefoot, with long, thin, black coats that reach from the neck to the heels and have no sleeve holes, and a high black cap with a cockade in front and a straight leather front piece. In addition to the weapons worn by the day force, each peeler carries a rifle slung over his shoulder. The policemen are very small in stature, and, like all the natives, are naturally averse to fighting. They are a quiet, peaceable race, affectionate and kind to each other, and apparently preferring at all times to submit to insult and abuse rather than to get into trouble. When they arrest a man they tie his arms behind him at the elbows and march him off to the nearest station, and they seem to feel actually sorry to be obliged to do it.

"When there is a fire the policeman blooms into a fireman. There are no fire alarm bells, but when a blaze starts some one runs to the nearest police station and informs the guard, who immediately blows a small whistle, and all the policemen within hearing come running in. Then two or three policemen start out blowing their whistles and gathering in the patrolmen, until there are fifteen or twenty at the station, who have stripped off their uniforms, and in bare feet and with no clothing but thin pants and shirt and a black glazed leather cap, are ready for work. The majority arm themselves with axes, two carry a pole with about 100 feet of rope and a small anchor attached to it, and two more carry a pole with perhaps 100 feet of two inch linen hose and a brass nozzle on it. Then they start off on a run for the fire, which, by this time, has gotten well under way.

"The water system is very good, the supply coming from a river or a lake several miles distant from the city, the water being pure and as clear as crystal. At intervals of perhaps fifty or a hundred feet on all the streets are little iron trap doors about 8x15 inches, under which the fire plug is located. On their arrival at the scene of the fire, the hose is attached to one of the plugs, and a stream can be thrown about one hundred feet. While this is working pails are used at the upright plugs (also used for drinking purposes), the men with the rope, anchor and poles pull down the surrounding houses, and everybody works frantically. As most of the houses are not more than twenty-five feet high, and are made of bamboo and cane leaves, huddled closely together, it doesn't take long to burn up one hundred of them. Last week over three hundred burned in an hour. Still the loss is usually light, for the natives seldom have more than two or three dollars' worth of household goods, and as it is quite comfortable to sleep out of doors, they are not seriously discommoded by being burned out."—St. Louis Republic.

Filling Bubbles with Gas.

Soap bubble parties were quite fashionable a little time back, and grown people took as much pleasure in the pretty amusement as ever young people did. Of course you all know how they are made, but perhaps some of you do not know that you can easily make them fly up into the air like balloons. This is how it is done: Get a rubber tube, say a yard long, and with an internal diameter small enough to require a good deal of stretching to force it over the gas burner. After you have fitted it tightly over the burner wrap the stem of a clay pipe with wet paper and push it into the other end of the tube, where it must fit so as to let no gas escape. Now dip the bowl of the pipe into the soapsuds and turn the gas on. The force of the gas will blow the bubble for you, and as the gas is lighter than the air, the bubble, when freed from the pipe, will go rapidly up and never stop until it collapses.—Philadelphia Times.

Horrible Custom in Spain.

A horrible custom prevails in southern Spain of exhibiting corpses, dressed in all the finery obtainable, in the windows. The people stand and gaze with as much interest as if the ghastly spectacle was one which gave them great pleasure, and remarks and even jokes are passed freely among them. A short time since a young girl who was about to be married sickened and died of virulent smallpox. Her parents dressed her in all her bridal finery, orange wreath and veil included, and laid her, disfigured as she was, in the window, to be gazed at by all passers by. After this one can hardly wonder at the fearful prevalence of smallpox and such like diseases in the southern part of the peninsula.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Maximum Brain Earnings.

A dinner was given to the Prince of Wales by eminent men of all professions. The bar, the church, music, painting and literature were all represented. The subject was discussed of how much a man could make with his brains, and it was agreed that $100,000 a year was the maximum, though a leading painter said he could make $150,000 if he gave up his vacation.—New York Sun.

Individuality of Various States.

When we study a state at its center, its political action, its organization, its spirit, the management of its institutions of learning and of charity, the tendencies, restrictive or liberal, of its legislation, even the tone of social life and the code of manners, we discover distinctions, individualities, almost as many differences as resemblances. And we see—the saving truth in our national life—that each state is a well nigh indestructible entity, an empire in itself, proud and conscious of its peculiarities, and jealous of its rights. We see that state boundaries are not imaginary lines, made by the geographers, which could be easily altered by the central power. Nothing, indeed, in our whole national development, considering the common influences that have made us, is so remarkable as the difference of the several states. Even on the lines of a common settlement, say from New England and New York, note the difference between northern Ohio, northern Indiana, northern Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Or take another line and see the difference between southern Ohio, southern Indiana, southern Illinois and northern Missouri.

But each state, with its diverse population, has a certain homogeneity and character of its own. We can understand this where there are great differences of climate, or when one is mountainous and the other is flat. But why should Indiana be so totally unlike the two states that flank it in so many of the developments of civilized life or in retarded action; and why should Iowa, in its entire temper and spirit, be so unlike Illinois? One state copies the institutions of another, but there is always something in its life that it does not copy from any other.—Harper's Magazine.

Work of an "Artistic Costumer."

"As I have no sign out, my business has never had any name. I suppose you might call it 'artistic costuming.' What I really do is to dress children, from babies up to the time they need draperies—when they go to the regular dressmaker. I never look at a fashion plate. I study old pictures and nature—everything that will help me to grace in designing and harmony of color. The unconventional is what I seek.

"My business was an outgrowth of a department of the Decorative Art society. Some one who did fine sewing for the society having failed to fill a contract for an infant's outfit, the question was raised: 'Who can we find to take this work—in all stages of incompletion—and finish it?' A friend, who had more faith in me than I in myself, overhearing the discussion, vouched for my capability, and, knowing that I wanted work, brought me the bundle and said: 'Now, just finish this, will you? You can do it if you try.' At that time I had not had a great deal to do with children, and had never known how much they were dressed. So you see the work brought to me was the last I naturally would have chosen. But there it was, and I did it, and have kept on doing it ever since. The ladies who trusted to my experience have continued to trust me. I have the three original customers with whom I began, and have carried their children through all the succeeding stages of long clothes, short dresses, guimpes and smocks."—Buffalo Courier.

Insects Destroying Timber.

It is said that worms are often more destructive to forests than fires or whirlwinds. The insects lay their eggs under the bark and they hatch in the darkness, which is a necessary element for their development. When they hatch into the grub form they bore their way into the sap wood and then make a circle around the tree once, twice, and perhaps three times, before it is time for them to turn into perfect winged insects. This stops the flow of the sap and the growth of the tree, and eventually the tree dies. Large tracks of dense forest in Maine have been destroyed in this way, and sometimes tracts in the Adirondacks.

It is claimed to be better for the forest to let in the woodman and allow him to thin out the trees and thus give light and air to the earth and forest growth. These insects will not develop where there is plenty of air and light, and it would be well for those who own a tract of woodland to bear this in mind and thin it sufficiently to prevent a dense, dark growth. It is told of a Maine man that he held a piece of forest for thirty years and would never allow any wood to be cut on it. When he came to examine it he found that a large part of it had been ruined by the girdle worm.—Chicago Times.

A Bath in the Dead Sea.

I stripped, put in one foot, then another; it was cold; I pressed on to the knees; I expected peculiar sensations, but expected in vain. Even to the chin the waters rose, and I could still keep my feet to the ground. It was not easy to detect the difference between ordinary salt water until, indeed, we tried to get dry, and then we found that we had suddenly become like Lot's wife. Intense irritation followed, and it took some days of washing before we got really rid of the unpleasant effects.—"Last Journals of Bishop Hannington."

Manufacturers of Artificial Silk.

Artificial silk is the latest discovery, and judging from the details of it that are to hand, it seems likely that the silkworm's occupation will soon be gone, and that he may retire to his cocoon and lament his lost importance in silence. The new material is made, we are told, from a kind of collodion, to which has been added perchloride of iron and tannic acid. The process of manufacture is somewhat complicated, but the result seems to be all that can be desired in the way of providing a substance practically equal to good silk.—Frank Leslie's.

Printing on Green Paper.

Several of the French railway companies, and other public bodies, have adopted the practice of having their printing done on green instead of white paper. The reason for this alteration is that they have concluded that the combination of white paper with black characters endangers the eyesight of their work people. Black on green has always been recognized as a good combination for this purpose, and many railway tickets are so printed.—New York Sun.

FOR PRESIDENT,

BENJAMIN HARRISON

OF INDIANA.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

LEVI P. MORTON

OF NEW YORK.

Death of General Sheridan.

Gen. P. H. Sheridan, commanding the United States army, died at his cottage in Nonquitt, Mass., at twenty minutes past ten o'clock Sunday night, Aug 6th. Gen. Sheridan was apparently about as well during the day, and up to 9:30 in the evening, as he had been at any time since his arrival at Nonquitt, but at that hour there was a recurrence of the heart failure which had so many times before caused grave apprehensions, and this time the remedies which had before prolonged his life proved of no avail.

Philip Henry Sheridan was born of Irish parents on March 6th, 1831, in Somerset, Perry county, Ohio. As a boy, and later as a cadet at West Point, he was more noted for horsemanship than as a scholar, though in his closing years at West Point he improved rapidly, and graduated with honor in 1853.

His record in the regular army prior to the breaking out of the rebellion was excellent, as an Indian fighter, and in arranging troubles with the Indians when possible. He was still a second lieutenant when the war broke out, but was quickly advanced to first lieutenant and then to captain; and in March, 1862, was appointed colonel of the Second Michigan Volunteer cavalry. From that time to the close of the war his record was one of daring, skill, bold enterprise and brilliant success. Honors deservedly won have since been heaped upon him, the last, his appointment to the revived grade of general of the army, which expired with him, having been bestowed June 2d of the present year, when his death was hourly expected.

Naval Intelligence.

Five of the naval cadets convicted of hazing on board the Constellation have been dismissed, and a number of others, recommended for dismissal, have not yet had their cases decided.

Lieut. Schaeffer, attached to the Swatara, returned to his ship last week after an unauthorized absence of two weeks. A court martial has been ordered.

The lieutenant's list of the navy has suffered recently. Lieutenant Hanson R. Tyler has been suspended for one year on account of drunkenness; Lieutenant Emory H. Taunt has been dismissed for the same cause, and two or three others are under the shadow of court martial from weak habits.

Lieut. T. B. Walling has been ordered from the Brooklyn to the Essex, Asiatic station.

Commanders W. S. Dana and G. W. Sumner, Lieutenant Commander F. W. Crocker, Lieutenants Sexton, Schroeder, Nelson, T. Houston, H. E. Niles, W. C. Babcock and C. P. Rees, have been detached from duty at the torpedo station, and ordered to duty at the naval war college.

Passed Assistant Paymaster John W. Jordan has been ordered to the Ossipee, relieving Paymaster George H. Read, detached, ordered to settle accounts and granted six months' leave of absence.

Commander E. T. Woodward has been ordered to command the ironclad Terror; Passed Assistant Engineers Ralph Aston, George Cowie Jr., and W. C. Eaton, and Assistant Engineer Leo D. Miner have been ordered to the Terror, all to be detached and placed on waiting orders on her arrival at New York.

Lieut. Alexander McCracken has reported his return home, and been placed on waiting orders.

Asst. Surgeon F. W. F. Wiebor has reported his return home, having been detached from the Vandalia, and has been placed on waiting orders.

Lieut. F. H. Tyler is ordered to the Yantic.

Gunner John Russell is ordered to the New Hampshire.

Gunner Patrick Lynch is ordered from the New Hampshire to the naval ordnance providing ground at Annapolis.

Carpenter Solon H. Meloon is ordered from the Wabash to the Richmond.

Carpenter William A. Barry is ordered from the Richmond to the Wabash.

Chief Engr. P. A. Rearick is ordered to the Franklin.

Passed Asst. Paymaster John W. Jordan has successfully passed his examination for promotion to paymaster.

Chief Engr. Thom Williamson is resting with his family at Warrenton, Va.

A telegram received Aug. 4th at the navy department from Rear Admiral Chandler, announces that the Brooklyn sailed from Yokohama for New York by way of Good Hope.

A barn belonging to Salmon Cummings, at Plaistow, was burned on the night of the 3d inst.; loss $5,000; incendiary.

At Lanesboro, Minn., during a storm on Saturday night, lightning struck the house of Martin Olson, killing him and three children.

Where the Nutmeg Grows.

Paddling into a little cove on the south side of the bay, we landed beside a clear rippling stream, and, having ordered the whole of the men to march in Indian file in front, we started by a little rugged path into the mountains, with my interpreter immediately behind me and the rajah just in front. Every foot of the journey, which was laborious in the extreme, disclosed fresh scenes of verdure and tropical splendor. Winding along the sides of deep ravines, sometimes dragging ourselves up by the creepers and undergrowth, we ultimately attained an altitude of about 1,000 feet above the sea and then entered the nutmeg country. Here we halted and rested. The rajah pulled some of the nutmegs and explained how far they were from being ripe.

Having rested sufficiently we again started forward, and after scrambling along for about an hour we gained a fine piece of tableland, over which we traveled for about another half an hour, when we reached three houses erected in the very heart of the forest. These were used by the natives for drying the nutmegs. The country was everywhere magnificent and the aroma of the spice laden air delicious. Nutmeg and other equally valuable trees were everywhere growing in great profusion. The fruit of the nutmeg in appearance resembles a pear, and when ripe opens and displays the nut covered with a beautiful red coating of mace. The nuts are then picked from the trees, put into baskets and taken to the houses, where they are husked and placed on shelves. They are then partially roasted over a slow fire until all the moisture is extracted. After this they are cooled and carried down to the village in nets ready to be bartered to the Bugis, Arabs and other traders who frequent the gulf in their small prows or junkos at the proper season.—Capt. Strachan's "New Guinea."

Dutch Force and Character.

The Dutch mind and the Dutch force and the Dutch character have never yet received their just award of appreciation. Somehow people have absorbed the idea, and that through English colored spectacles, that the Dutchman was stolid, phlegmatic, unaspiring and lacking in push, go and vigor. The Dutchman may not have rushed around like a headless hen, using up his strength in doing things that amounted to nothing. He may have sat in his several ten breeches and meditated, pipe in mouth, but when he got up he put his finger where it did the most good. He fought the ocean successfully for centuries. He has made his gardens below the ocean's level. He was a bold explorer. He traded and settled in Africa and Japan generations before other nations.

He was a terrible fighter on the seas. He once swept through the English channel of English ships, and the thunder of Van Tromp's guns was heard at Westminster. He was overcome by the English only in name when Stuyvesant indignantly threw the surrender of New Amsterdam out of the window at the mob who clamored for it. Because the Dutch blood and the Dutch spirit still remained solid, more than solid, patient instead of lazy, reserving its force till it knew it was time to act, and so when mynheer did sit down on anything or anybody, he sat down very hard, and he sat to stay, and he has staid, and hence today the Dutch descended Van Millionaires again sweeps through the English channel of nobility as triumphantly as old Van Tromp.—Prentice Mulford in New York Star.

Women Rulers in Europe.

The close of the Nineteenth century promises or threatens to be a period of petticoat government. A probable empress-queen is growing up in Austria, there is a regent in Spain, and next a baby king afflicted with a nervous disease. Two healthier children, girls both, stand in the order of succession. The heiress apparent to the throne of the Netherlands is a girl. Said to me an ex-minister to the court of St. Petersburg, "the czar's two sons are malingres et chetifs, and there is a prospect of a czarina in her own right." The imperial crown of Brazil must soon fall to the crown princess, a woman of moral stamina and fine emotions. She has carried, against a high and threatening tide of opposition, the abolition of slavery.

It is to correct the feeble constitution of the czarewitch that the czar has been brought to entertain the idea of marrying him to a young lady of a hardy mountain race not consanguine in any degree with him. Her offspring, if she had any, might be an improvement on the existing Romanoffs. The Montenegrin princess and the czarewitch would form such a couple as Mary Stuart and Francis II. The queen of Greece, the same diplomatist tells me, has gone to St. Petersburg to induce the czar to prefer her daughter to the princess from the Black mountain.—Universal Review

A Paradise for Bankers.

Manghooria appears to be the paradise of bankers. Our consul in Newchwang says that it is well known wealthy mandarins and merchants, not caring for their wealth to be known, make deposits with bankers without taking receipts, and that it is a curious fact that rather than risk the loss of capital so deposited by its becoming known to the paternal government, to whom probably such capital rightly belongs, no interest is derived from such deposits, except of course for the banker's own investments. At the death of a depositor his heir may not know that 100,000 taels, more or less, are deposited in some bank or other. From such causes as these, says this authority, native bankers become very rich. —London News.

Singular Plant in Georgia.

A queer little growth makes its appearance in the wire grass country of Georgia. It is called by the natives the dollar plant, from the singularity of its leaves, which are perfectly round, lying flat upon the ground, and when full grown the exact size of a dollar. When the plant is pulled up it is seen that the leaves retain their perfect roundness from their incipiency, and grow through all the gradations the money takes, from the size of the silver five cent piece to dimes, quarters, halves and the coin from which it takes its name. In summer it throws out from the center a cluster of yellow flowers.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Discarding Rubbers.

The fashion of discarding rubbers in wet weather and having the shoes oiled instead was set by the police, letter carriers and car drivers, and is now being followed by thousands, whose feet are injured by wearing rubbers. Those who have to face a winter out of doors and who complain that rubbers pain or cripple them, unite in declaring that to keep the feet warm and dry it is only necessary to wear shoes a size or two too large, oil them and put in a felt or cork insole under a woolen stocking.—New York Sun.

Superfine Flour.

There is no article of food more generally consumed than wheat flour in its various forms of bread and pastry, but chemists by examination find that by its use, mankind loses two-thirds of the elements that go to make up bone and muscle. These vital elements are the phosphates which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of health, and which nature has provided in the wheat grain, but man has removed from flour in the process of bolting. It was this fact that suggested the invention of Prof. Horsford of his preparation for a baking powder that would add these nutritious phosphates, and thereby supply the deficiency in the flour. In place of the alum, cream tartar, etc., used in common baking powders, he produced an acid phosphate, and thus makes a baking powder which not only raises the dough, but leaves in the bread the vital phosphates of which the flour has been deprived.

Defenders of American Industry.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

"American wages for American workmen."—Republican motto.

A terrible explosion recently occurred in a fire-works factory at Wandsworth, a section of London. Several women who were at work in the building were killed.

Seventeen persons were drowned by the wreck of the British ship Star of Greece at Adelaide, Australia, July 13th.

Silesia is being devastated by terrible floods, the worst known in thirty years.

A pleasing incident occurred at Stratford-on-Avon last Friday, when Augustin Daly's Comedy company from New York gave "The Taming of the Shrew" at Shakespeare's Memorial Theatre for the benefit of that institution. The affair was well described in a cable report published in the New York Tribune of the next morning, written by the dramatic critic of the Tribune, Mr. William Winter.

"Hood's Political Points," a handy little book for the presidential campaign, is just out. It contains finely engraved portraits and sketches of the candidates for president and vice president of the republican, democratic and prohibition parties; the electoral and popular vote in the previous election, and other useful information. Copies may be had free of the druggists, or by sending a two cent stamp to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Thirty-five debenture bonds of the Equitable Mortgage Co. of Kansas City for $1000 each were recently stolen at Albany. This shows the increasing confidence of a certain class of money men in this kind of security.

Charles Perkins, alias Wilson, a desperado, shot and killed two United States marshals and one citizen at DeKalb, Texas, Aug. 5th, while resisting arrest. Perkins escaped unhurt.

Lightning struck the house of Lawrence McLaughlin of Hazelwood, Minn., killing Mrs. McLaughlin and her two sons.

At Spantock, Connecticut, Sunday, Aug. 5th, while arranging a blast in a rock cut on the Derby railroad, a 25-lb. can of powder exploded in the arms of an Italian laborer, blowing him to pieces, and fatally injuring Dennis Sullivan, the gang boss.

At Lewiston, Me., on the night of Aug. 4th, John Lahey was stabbed through the heart and a man named Connor badly and perhaps fatally wounded. Three men were arrested on suspicion of being the murderers.

Floods are doing enormous damage to bridges and railways throughout Switzerland.

PEARLINE has no equal for all purposes for which soap is used. It is the greatest known economizer of time, drudgery, and wear and tear in washing and cleaning.

MILLIONS of packages of Pearline are consumed annually, by economical, intelligent housekeepers—women who are quick to embrace modern labor-saving ideas; or, not doing the work themselves, are bright enough to supply their servants with Pearline. They get the best possible results, and have fewer backaches and complaints. Their clothes and paint wear longer because they are not rubbed to pieces.

Beware of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them.

Pearline sells on its merits, and is never peddled.

Be Sure

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation, curative power superior to any other article. A Boston lady who knew what she wanted, and whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below:

To Get

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I knew what Hood's Sarsaparilla was. I had taken it, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other.

Hood's

When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable, suffering a great deal with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly stand. I looked, and had for some time, like a person in consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I wonder at myself sometimes, and my friends frequently speak of it." MRS. ELLA A. GOFF, 61 Terrace Street, Boston.

THE WEATHER.

For New England to-day:—

Threatening weather, with local rains, stationary or higher temperature, winds southerly and easertly.

ELECTION DAY.

The polls open this morning at nine o'clock for the annual municipal election, and close at six. The republican nominations are all excellent, and should receive the full party vote, at the least. Should this be given, the next city government will not be so unanimous an organization as the present one.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY.

The ladies residing for the summer in the old Warner mansion, corner of Daniel and Chapel streets, were aroused about half-past one o'clock Monday morning by a noise as of some person cautiously attempting to open a window at the back of the house. In the house was one of the old-fashioned rattles such as watchmen carried forty years or so age, and armed with this one of the ladies opened an upper widow and made such a clatter as few of those who heard it ever heard before, rousing the entire neighborhood. Mr. Willie B. Newton, who lives near by, quickly responded to the alarm, and was soon joined by Officer Wendell, who heard the rattle while he was on Bow street, and others. The house was thoroughly searched from top to bottom, but nothing suspicious was discovered inside; on the outside of the window sills at the rear of the house were marks on the fresh paint that might have been made by some person trying to affect an entrance, and the first gentleman who answered the alarm was confident that he heard hurried steps on the flags in the back yard just after he arrived.

FIRE.

The ice-house, carriage-house and workshop of Mr. James Leavitt at North Hampton were burned on Sunday; loss $1500, covered by insurance. Cause of fire not stated.

A BOOM FOR SORRENTO.

A despatch of Aug. 5th from Sorrento, Me., to a Boston paper, says: "It looks very much as if Frank Jones, the New Hampshire brewer and democrat, would soon have a new proof of his influence with the administration. Sorrento is one of Mr. Jones' land operations, and a presidential boom will be a fine thing. It is given out that the boom will really be given soon. It is said that the party, including the president, his wife, and eight or ten friends, will leave Washington about the middle of August. They will be joined in Portland by William I. Putnam, a member of the recent fishery commission, and a few others. The party will then proceed directly to this place. Frequent trips will be made to Bar Harbor, six miles across the bay, where the family of Secretary Whitney is stopping. The party will occupy the Monmouth Cottage, a three-story building owned by James P. Cook, partner of Frank Jones. Near this is the house of Mr. Lamont, at present occupied by Mrs. Lamont, her two daughters Bessie and Madge, and Mrs. Saunders and Miss Saunders. There will be one and only one political demonstration during the trip in which President Cleveland will take part, and that will take place at Bangor."

ABSENTEES.

It would hardly be thought that residents of Portsmouth would be induced to leave town during the summer months, to sojourn elsewhere. But this custom increases annually. In one neighborhood at the west end are six houses in close proximity, where the occupants of each have gone to the mountains or the seaside for the season. Perhaps one of these days the householders here will vacate their homes as is done at Newport, R. I., and derive income enough from the rental for the summer to make the pot boil for the remainder of the year. The customs of these old places are changing rapidly. Good gracious! Shall we become a borough of boarding houses? Who knows?

PERSONAL.

Miss Emily I. Hoyt of Northwest street is on a visit to friends in Philadelphia.

Misses Jennie and Helen Hanscom, daughters of Mr. C. Dwight Hanscom of Dennett street, are visiting friends in Hyde Park, Mass.

Mr. John G. Tompson, of Newtonville, Mass., is passing a few days at Lincoln Hill cottage.

Hon. and Mrs. C. T. Russell of Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. Appleton Brown, the artists, are at the Isles of Shoals.

Lewis Longell and Howard Bedell, of Raynes' Neck, York, were in this city on Monday, and announced themselves as Harrison and Morton men.

In the last week's lists of arrivals at the various summer resorts we notice the names of Mrs. D. Montgomery of this city and Mrs. J. S. H. Frink of Greenland at the Boar's Head hotel, Hampton; Charles P. Ferry and Calvin Page, of this city, at the Sinclair house, Bethlehem; H. Q. Mason and wife of this city at the North Conway house; E. C. Matthews of this city at the Ocean house, and Thomas Mitchell, Charles Googan, Joseph Banks, Frank Whitman, George L. Hoitt, W. C. Armstrong, James Carroll and W. A. Leary of this city at Sea Cottage, York beach.

Mr. John Dean, salesman with Jordan, Marsh & Co. of Boston, is visiting his parents, Mr. Ira Dunbar and wife at Kittery Foreside.

Mr. Henry Muchemore and wife, of Marshalltown, Iowa, have for a week or more been visiting Mr. Muchemore's parents, Mr. George W. Muchemore and wife of North Kittery. Mr. Muchemore is an engineer on one of the western railroads. His wife is a western lady, and never saw the salt water until her present visit east. They intend leaving for the west on Wednesday.

Mr. Wallace E. Bartlett of Hartford, Conn., on Saturday morning arrived in North Kittery, where his wife has been for several weeks on a visit to his mother.

Mrs. William F. Briard and daughter, of Worcester, Mass., are on a visit to Mrs. Briard's parents, Mr. Jacob Patch and wife of Kittery Foreside, and will remain until the 1st of September. Mr. Briard, who has also been in Kittery several days, will return to Worcester on Wednesday.

Senator Fassett of the New York legislature is at York beach. He expects to leave for New York this week, and resume the sessions of the investigating committee of which he is chairman, and to ascertain how much Gov. Hill has made out of the aqueduct contracts.

Colonel Henry Stone of Independence square, South Boston, is at the Stone homestead at Bolton, Mass., with his step-daughter, Miss Sybil Whiton.

ACCIDENTAL.

Mr. Michael Callahan on Monday fell through a hatchway at C. E. Boynton's bottling establishment on Bow street, where he was at work, through taking an inadvertent step. He was very much shaken up, the distance from that floor to the one below at the rear of the building being twelve feet, and his arms were somewhat lacerated. Dr. Sherburne was immediately called, and Mr. Callahan was taken to his home, where later in the day he was reported to be doing well.

MARITIME NOTES.

There were three square-rigged vessels, two brakentines and one brig, lying at the northend wharves on Monday, awaiting a change of weather before proceeding to sea. They look very well coming up the harbor flying the meteor flag of England, which nobody wishes to see pulled down, in spite of the American flag being thus treated in Provincial waters. Square-riggers, although lately considered a curiosity here by the younger population, hardly seem strange in these waters at present.

The receipts of mackerel at Gloucester and outports last week from the entire fleet footed up but 1176 barrels; the total catch to Aug. 4th footed up but 10,262 barrels, against 22,262 barrels at same date last year, 25,928 barrels in 1886, and 152,755 barrels in 1885, showing a falling off of 142,500 as compared with three years ago. The prices last week ranged from $10 a barrel for tinkers to $24 for No. 1's, very few of the latter being brought in; No. 3's brought $17.50. The mackerel fishery of the British provinces amounts to nothing as yet. The mackerel is getting played out, like the lobster and the bison.

Coal freights to this port were on the 4th quoted from Baltimore at $1.05 and from Philadelphia at $1.00 per ton.

The big coal barge which arrived at this port the first of last week, was at high water slack on Monday forenoon, the 6th inst., towed by the steamer Clara Batemen from the Concord railroad wharf to the lower harbor, where she came to anchor, awaiting better weather and the arrival of an ocean tug before going to sea.

The schooner Ocean Belle was capsized and sunk during a squall on Wednesday night, the 1st inst., while westward bound from Cape Sable on a swordfishing trip. The crew, which consisted of Capt. Griffin of Harpswell, Me., and his three sons, were picked up by the schooner Urania on Thursday, and landed at Vinalhaven. One of the men was picked up twenty miles off Isle au Haut, having been adrift several hours in a dory.

William Danbury and C. Black of Eastport, Me., were on Saturday, Aug. 4th, preparing to fish in British waters at Campobello, when they were disturbed by a very unpleasant dream—the Dominion fishery protection cruiser Dream, which in spite of their efforts to escape to American waters overhauled them, took their vessel in tow, and carried her into St. Andrews, N. B.

The steamer Gate City, from Savannah, grounded outside of Castle rock, near Castle Island, Boston harbor, Sunday night. Her passengers and cargo were removed Monday, but up to Monday evening the tugs had not been able to haul her off.

There is no valid reason why any republican of this city should neglect to vote for the party nominees to-day. The ticket will bear inspection from end to end.

Mr. George S. Leach reports that between nine o'clock in the morning and five in the afternoon, last Saturday, 740 teams passed over Sagamore bridge; and that on the corresponding date last year the number crossing was 670.

About nine o'clock Sunday morning a young man employed by the Portsmouth Bewing Co. jumped overboard off the company's wharf, and getting out into the current swam steadily against it for a full half hour, finally effecting a landing at the point from which he started, although the current there is stronger than at most any place on the river. It was a fine exhibition of coolness, endurance and skill in swimming.

Lemuel Manson of Dennett street will remove his family to Amesbury, Mass., about the middle of August. Reuben Worcester of Maplewood avenue will occupy Mr. Manson's house.

Mr. Edwin W. Berry has purchased the property No. 15 Ladd street, recently occupied by Mr. Benjamin Powell, and is fitting up the lower story for a bake house, while the upper part will be occupied by himself as a dwelling.

Mr. William Moore, residing at his old ancestral home at the extreme point of Raynes' neck, York, where his maternal ancestor Francis Raynes was buried, is now an octogenarian. He has not been quite well of late, but expects to be able to vote for Harrison for president.

George H. Clark's shell and curio store in the postoffice building at Old Ochard, Me., was entered Thursday night and $35 stolen from his sleeping apartment in the rear, and a gold watch belonging to his clerk, Charles J. Brown.

The large arrivals of summer boarders at the hotels of late have caused great activity at C. E. Boynton's establishment on Bow street, where large quantities of summer beverages are being bottled by the assistance of a large force of help.

In accordance with a vote of the New Hampshire Historical society, President J. Everett Sargent of Concord has appointed the following committee to represent the society at the 250th anniversary of the settlement of the town of Hampton, Aug. 15th: Joseph Walker, Hon. Sylvester Dana, Rev. C. L. Tappan, Isaac W. Hammond, Colonel J. E. Precker of Concord, and Isaac K. Gage of Penacook.

Thomas Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky., writes: "Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. Tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best hair-restorer in the world."

"My hair was faded and dry," writes Mabel C. Hardy, of Delavan, Ill.; "but after using a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it became black and glossy."

Three Summer Dangers.

The three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires temperance, abstinance, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" so frequently urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

OH, WHAT A COLD!

This is the season for sudden changes in the weather, and a great many "take cold" either in their Head or on their Lungs, causing Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. These troubles can be soon relieved and cured by taking Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific, which acts directly on the Throat and Lungs, entirely removing these difficulties.

Cured his boy of Croup.

C. M. BROOKS, Lowell, Mass., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific as a cure for Coughs, Colds and Croup. I used it in my family last winter with the best results. Two or three doses cured my little boy of Croup, for which I am very thankful."

You can cure that Cough in a short time. You can cure your Catarrh if you persist in its use, as it will stop the secretion of Catarrhal matter in the head; it will relieve Croup in from three to five minutes.

The best he ever saw.

"The best medicine for Coughs and Consumptive Complaints that ever I saw is Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific," so says JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of Boston.

Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific is sold by all Druggists. Price 50 cents and $1. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

EUROPE'S ARMED PEACE.

The Terrible Strain on the Nations—The Next War.

The whole continent seems to be under some horrible enchantment. The armed peace sits like a vampire at the bedside of the people, draining their life blood while they sleep. Hence, say some, war is certain. The nations cannot stand the strain much longer. Sooner or later, and sooner rather than later, they will rush to war rather than wait to be slowly suffocated by the sheer weight of their armor.

As the armed peace is a nightmare fouler than the world has yet suffered, so the next war is an appalling catastrophe from which imagination shrinks aghast. For there is nothing in modern history that it will resemble. Hitherto, down even to the last wars, when empires have gone to battle it has been a war of soldiers. The next war will be a war of peoples. In the Russo-Turkish war it was an army framed on the old system which was repulsed at Plevna, and ultimately swept in triumph to Constantinople. In the Franco-German war the French army was largely professional, and it was because the standing army of professional soldiers went down like ninepins before the irresistible rush of an armed nation that all military systems have been revolutionized. Now every nationhas armed all its able bodied adults.

In former days the mustering of a half million of soldiers was regarded as a mighty feat. Today Prince Bismarck adds to the ranks of the army of the fatherland, with one stroke of his pen, 700,000 fathers of families, and not a single voice is raised even in passing protest. Germany in the center of Europe fronts east and west with an available host of 3,000,000 trained soldiers. France will have between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 ready to hand. Russia before long will be able to put 5,000,000 into line. Austria and Italy we need not count. The blast of the trumpets that proclaims the beginning of war will summon the manhood of Europe to the work of slaughter.

Not only will the number of the combatants be far beyond those which were raised even in the days of the First Napoleon—the grand army with which he crossed the frontier on his march to Moscow only consisted of the same number of men that has been added this year to the German army—but the spirit in which it will be brought out will differ for the worse. Prince Bismarck has frankly told us what kind of war it will be. We shall fight, he said, if we do fight, until we are bled as white as veal. It will be a duel to the death—a war in which the avowed object of the combatants is the utter destruction of their adversary.

"Saigner a blanc," to drain the very life blood of your enemy until you leave his carcass as white as that of the calf from which the butcher seeks to drain every ruddy drop of gore—that is the declared ideal of the foremost nation of the continent in the year of grace 1888. The imagination refuses to picture what it means. All our recent wars were short. The longest was that of the Crimea, which was little more than the siege and the defense of a single fortress by professional soldiers. The Franco-Italian war was almost an affair of weeks. The Danish war was over almost before it began. The Austro-Prussian-Italian war lasted just six weeks. The Franco-German war was over in six months. The conquest of Turkey was completed in about the same time.

But the next war will not be over in six weeks or six months. To bleed each other white, when both combatants are pretty well matched, and when there are millions of men in reserve, is an affair of years. But when all the business is suspended, and the reapers have been summoned from the farm to the battlefields, it will be impossible to carry on war on this scale for years without utter collapse and ghastly famine. Hence the embattled millions will fight with the grim and desperate energy of men who know that, like Judas, what they do they must do quickly. They will strike terror. All the tourney rules of civilized war will be in danger of going by the board. It will be a contest of titans waged with the ruthlessness of fiends. The next war will be in danger of degenerating into the Nineteenth century version of the horrors of the thirty years' war, on a scale far more gigantic, and therefore characterized by crimes far more colossal.—Pall Mall Gazette.

When Lawyers Are Rusty.

Yes, lawyers frequently call upon clerks for points in pleadings and practice. In fact, scarcely a day passes but that some lawyer, frequently the most successful practitioner, will call upon the clerk for information relative to the details of pleadings, and the suggestions given are generally of incalculable benefit, because always accurate. A majority of lawyers are up with the law and authorities, but many of them are rusty in the ordinary pleadings, which are sometimes rather complicated.—Deputy Circuit Clerk in Globe-Democrat.

Rare and Interesting Relics.

There is a thriving industry at Nicheweang in Petersham, where ornamental articles are made from rare woods grown in this country and abroad. The proprietor has in stock a wheel belonging to a chariot in Egypt which shows the rude workmanship of those times. A lover of interesting relics has brought to the shop a piece of an old whipping post which stood in Richmond, Va., in slavery times. Some pretty articles were turned out from this interesting piece of wood.—Boston Transcript.

Capable of Bearing Arms.

M. Gervais, a French authority, says there are men capable of bearing arms—in Germany, 5,000,000; in France, 4,500,000; in Austria-Hungary, 1,800,000; in Italy, 2,000,000; in England, 800,000; in Russia, 8,000,000, and all the other European states, 4,000,000. That gives a total of 24,100,000. Of that number 10,000,000 are trained soldiers.—Boston Budget.

Fabric Made from Nettles.

The fabric known as Chinese grass cloth is made from the fiber of nettles. The cloth is peculiarly glossy and transparent, and, as belting for machinery, has double the strength of leather.—Public Opinion.

Virtue of Sunlight.

Sunlight is as essential to animal as vegetable life. Physicians say the number of patients cured in hospital rooms exposed to the rays of the sun are four times as great as those confined in darkened rooms.—Boston Budget.

Ladies' Cigarettes.

There are three establishments in Paris devoted to the manufacture of ladies' cigarettes, and they do a large business. Most of the cigarettes contain opium, and perfumes are freely used.—Chicago Herald.

The study of the Scriptures as a ... after new things has not developed the special interest that was expected; but one person is spoken of who, having taken to the study of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures from the merest curiosity, has developed a new interest in the Christian religion.—Boston Transcript.

Large Flock of Blackbirds.

A flock of blackbirds that must have been nearly two miles in length was seen by the passengers on a Pennsylvania railroad train recently. The birds were so numerous that they darkened the sky for a few minutes and presented a most novel spectacle.—New York Evening World.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachael's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

I have been a great sufferer from dry catarrh for many years, and I tried many remedies which helped me, but I had none which did me so much benefit as Ely's Cream Balm. It completely cured me.—M. J. Lally, 39 Woodward Ave., Boston Highlands, Mass.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head—for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs. Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do? —and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

THE DOCTORS honestly admit that they can't cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia. One say they can but—don't. Athlophoros says nothing but—cures. That's the secret of its success. Years of trial have proved it to be a quick, safe, sure cure.

In the Amusing Comedietta Of "Used Up,"

Sir Charles Coldstream, a blase man of fashion, is made to deprecate everything in which everybody else is supposed to take an interest, with the languid remark that "there is really nothing in it." He even extended the criticism to the crater of Vesuvius, down which he looked but saw "nothing in it." Such characters are scarcer on this side of the Atlantic than abroad, but they exist here notwithstanding. Such men need a "fillip to nature" to medicinally stimulate their jaded appetite, overcome their lassitude, and renew the zest of existence. They and others upon whom the world's enjoyments are beginning prematurely to pall, will find in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a welcome and speedy renewal of vigor and health. Appetite returns, dyspeptic and billious symptoms disappear, the nerves grow strong, and the hour of retirement is unfraught with apprehension of uneasy repose when this superlative tonic is employed. It remedies fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Dandruff eradicated, the scalp made clean, and gray hair restored to its original youthful beauty and vigor by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Seymour Thatcher, M. D., of Hermon, N. Y., says Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry cures a cough by loosening and clearing the lungs and allaying irritation, thus removing the cause instead of drying up the cough and leaving the cause behind.

Peculiar

In the combination, proportion, and preparation of its ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures where other preparations entirely fail. Peculiar in its good name at home, which is a "tower of strength abroad," peculiar in the phenomenal sales it has attained, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most successful medicine for puryifying the blood, giving strength, and creating an appetite.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester. Geowtjan29

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

BLINDNESS.

Shall I be ready when the shadow falls?
When up my heaven's blue walls
The fatal darkness creeps, and I must go
So still, so slow.

The smallest child could soon outstrip my pace?
When each dear loving face
Must well from me its hourly smiles or tears,
Its joys or fears?

When wayside plumes of golden rod shall flame
For other eyes the same?
When autumn's burning bugles shall flaunting hold
Their red and gold?

When pitying hands shall take from mine the task
Unfinished—and I ask
If it be night, that threads run so untrue?
When I am through.

With sunshine and the light of solemn stars?
When through my dungeon bars
I reach a guiltless captive's hands, and grope,
Without a hope?

Shall I be ready for that silent blow?
This truth I feel and know:
That I must work while yet the pulse of day
Beats on my way;

That I must weave while still the threads run true—
If many threads or few:
That I must strive, till on my darkening walls
The blackness falls!

WHY DO YOU EAT?

A Pertinent Question—Violation of Nature's Law—The Penalty.

Why do you eat? This query, if responded to by the majority of people on the spur of the moment, would, no doubt, result in answers as varied as the individuals to whom it is propounded. Why do you eat? Truly a pertinent question, and one which should be considered as of sufficient importance for careful reflection. A query of this character is the source of momentary surprise possibly to an intelligent person, for the reason it is directed to a daily habit or exercise which has become so strongly automatic that our attention is not fixed in its consideration. We arise in the morn, early or late as the case may be, and eat; go to labor for five hours or so, eat again; seek recreation for the eve and possibly eat again, and finally retire to obtain the benefits of nature's sweet restorer—sleep.

In and through all this the healthy individual uses no force in thought or attention, but is the automaton. This is as it should be, if nature and things natural were natural. Are things in nature natural? The reply to this we think can be found, to a large extent, for the purpose of our paper, in the replies our query would bring forth.

Why do you eat? The dyspeptic says, "From necessity." The epicure says, "From a ruling desire on the part of my sense of taste." The glutton says, "To get enough." The laboring man says, "To work." The natural man says, "To enjoy life; to live." The dyspeptic's reply is a sad contrast to that of the natural man. Ask the dyspeptic what he would do or give for the privilege or ability to sit down at the table hungry, actuated only by the principle that actuates the natural man, namely: "To enjoy life, to live." Why, methinks, if he is not too far along in his distemper, that expression of disgust and despair would change into a broad grin of happy anticipation; the dull, listless eye brighten with a gleam of its pristine intelligence, and there would burst from his lips the exclamation: "Do or give? anything! everything!" Poor victim! In this exclamation is found the explanation for his dyspepsia. It is just because he was at one time able and did do "anything" and "everything" that today he has dyspepsia.

If we ask the epicure or glutton the same question as the dyspeptic, we will find that they are perfectly content. They have not violated law and order long enough as yet; have not done "anything" and "everything" a sufficient number of times to reach that miserable existence allotted to the dyspeptic. Their desires and wishes are fully satisfied.

There comes a time finally for all of these classes when the "dead line," so to speak, is met. To halt and put a stop to the reckless violation which has been going on means salvation. To keep on and cross this dead line means everlasting [illegible]. The salvation that is established [illegible] to meet this dead line is, like for those [illegible] we have heard of, established law and order, not other salvation [illegible] lished for viola[illegible] but entails for many easy of attainment, [illegible] victim a rigidity days upon the repentant [illegible] purpose that of rule and persistence o[illegible] measures and deprives life of most of its p[illegible] to our leads the poor victim in responsi[illegible]ity." query to say, "I eat from neces[illegible]." He is still a dyspeptic, notwithstanding his efforts toward salvation, and will be until that salvation is fully attained. But this physical salvation accomplished, is our dyspeptic become the natural man? Can he, as can the natural man, exclaim in accents glad and joyous, "I eat to enjoy life; to live?" Let us see. We live to learn, and, as truly, learn to live. Experience is apt to determine man's actions. License is only permitted when it is safe. The dyspeptic has truly lived to learn, if he has not lost all reason, and we have no doubt but that the redeemed dyspeptic will testify that he has learned to live. But his experience has taught him a lesson which will, during his remaining life, be ever in mind. He knows beyond all doubt that there is no license for him, and that as surely as he permits any license, just so surely will there come back to him the forerunners of those monstrous miseries which led him to exclaim: "I eat from necessity."—Globe-Democrat.

New York and Foreign Cities.

There is no palpable New York in the sense in which there is a Paris, a Vienna, a Milan. You can touch it at no point. It is not even ocular. There is instead a Fifth avenue, a Broadway, a Central park, a Chatham square. How they have dwindled, by the way. Fifth avenue might be any one of a dozen London streets in the first impression it makes on the retina and leaves on the mind. The opposite side of Madison square is but a step away. The spacious hall of the Fifth Avenue hotel has shrunk to trifling proportions. Thirty-fourth street is a lane; the city hall a bandbox; the Central park a narrow strip of elegant landscape, whose lateral limitations are constantly forced upon the sense by the Lenox library on one side and the monster apartment house on the other.—Princeton Review.

Artist Versus Cattle Dealer.

Artists can, in the course of a summer morning's walk in the country, find material for their best landscapes, and their training has been such that the knowledge so found can be applied to the best advantage. With eyes that see everything in nature, judgment that rejects the commonplace and takes cognizance of all that which is valuable, and with a memory that is as faithful to retain every effect as is the sensitized plate in the camera, such artists represent the highest type of Nature's pupils. A few pencil memoranda of subjects, taken hastily during the walk, is all that is needed to fix the scenes and locality, and serve in the reproduction of these in the studio. The opposite type is found in a worthy Pittsburger, a cattle dealer, who recently sat for his portrait. He had just returned from a trip that extended through the grandest and most impressive scenery of the great west, and the artist—a devout lover of nature—hoped to extract from his patron some fresh ideas of the grandeur of the Rockies and the canyons of Colorado. It was a hopeless longing. The cattle dealer's mind was an absolute blank as to nature's handiwork.

He was overflowing with knowledge of quite a different order. He filled the artist with details of the cost of raising cattle in every state and territory of the west, of the best places and the poorest; of the cost that each marketable steer represented, and of the cost of shipment of cattle from every western point to the nearest market. The artist was wearied with a surfeit of cattle knowledge and was constrained to ask about the mountains and the lakes and the scenic wonders of the land of cattle and canyons. It was useless. His patron, outside of his own narrow but practical field of observation, had seen nothing and could only reply, "Mountains? Really I did not notice them except to think that they seemed a good deal in the way of the railroads."—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The City of Quito.

If it were not for the climate, Quito would be in the midst of a perpetual pestilence; but notwithstanding the prevailing filthiness, there is very little sickness, and pulmonary diseases are unknown. Mountain fever, produced by cold and a torpid liver, is the commonest type of disease. The population of the city, however, is gradually decreasing, and is said to be now about 60,000. There were 500,000 people at Quito when the Spaniards came, and a hundred years ago the population was reckoned at double what it is now. Half the houses in the town are empty, and to see a new family moving in would be a sensation. Most of the finest residences are locked and barred, and have remained so for years. The owners are usually political exiles who are living elsewhere, and can neither sell nor rent their property. Political revolutions are so common, and their results are always so disastrous to the unsuccessful, that there is a constant stream of fugitives leaving the state.—Curtis in American Magazine.

Meissonier's Method of Study.

Meissonier, in order to study thoroughly the movements of the men and horses in the storming squadron in the picture "1807," he pursued, as he told us, an entirely original method. First of all, in the autumn of the preceding year he had a large piece of ground near the city sowed with rye. In May, when it stood in green stalks, by permission of the commandant, he had a battery of artillery driven over it. Of the trampled stalks crushed by the wheels Meissonier made large and sufficient studies. He then procured permission from the military authorities to have a battery in garrison at Poissy ride over it, and directed the troops to shout "Vive l'Empereur," swinging their swords and trumpets. So, by repeated observations of these cuirassiers and horses, he impressed upon his mind the whole scene, at the same time making the most complete studies of single horses and men, and of every part of their figures, in the uniforms of the French cuirassier regiments in the time of Napoleon.—Art Connoisseur.

The Women of Bulgaria.

At home the Bulgarian woman is a sturdy, honest housewife, helpmeet to her husband in all that the term applies. Beside attending to the care of the household, she performs not less of the hard, grinding drudgery of the field than her husband does, and often more. Nor does she rebel at this or think it a hardship. From early youth the Bulgarian maiden is accustomed to share with her brothers the labor and exposure of the fields, and at marriage her husband is required to pay her father a sum of money as a compensation for the loss of her services as a field hand. She is likewise purchased from the father by her nearly purchaser, the consideration ranging from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars, the means of the wooer. As a mere matter of course she then performs as much farm work for her husband as she did previously for her father.—Thomas Stevens in Woman.

Arsenic as a Cosmetic.

The deleterious effect of arsenic upon the skin was recently discussed in the Pathological society of London, after a communication had been read by Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson. The skin is the tissue on which arsenic has, perhaps, its most marked influence. The poison may spoil the complexion instead of improving it, by making it muddy and unsightly. A similar action is exhibited in all parts of the skin, and may lead to the development of soft corns, not warts, on the palms of the hands and soles of the feet, where a roughened condition also grows up under its influence. Mr. Hutchinson also expressed the belief that arsenic can produce epithelial cancer.—Popular Science Monthly.

Sad Fate for the Dog.

"No, ma'am," said the tramp gratefully, as he shouldered his bundle and prepared to start on again, "I don't keer fur nuthin' more to eat, thank you, but I'll be obleeged if you'll give me two or three o' them there biscuits. I don't carry no weepins, and they've got a savage dog at that next house."—Chicago Tribune.

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

Impurities in the blood produce diseases, Bodily and mental health depend upon a healthy condition of the blood. The blood, particularly in the spring and during the hot summer months, becomes clogged with impurities, which poison it and generate disease. A harmless blood purifier, without a particle of mineral poison in it, such as mercury or potash, is necessary to remove these impurities and to restore the healthy tone of mind and body. The best purifier and tonic known to the world is Swift's Specific (S.S.S.). In regard to its wonderful purifying and tonic powers we give a few testimonials as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce Street, New York, writes March 29th, 1888: "I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use as my testimony in any way you choose. I will answer any inquiry from others in relation to the facts herewith stated. In February last I suffered great pain and inconvenience from boils, all over my neck; I could not turn my head without acute pain and my blood was in poor condition. After trying all the usual remedies in such cases, and finding no relief, by the persuasion of Mr. J. W. Fears, Manager of your New York Office, I used one bottle S. S. S., and I improved rapidly and very soon I was entirely relieved of my "Job's Comforters." Now not a sign of my affliction can be seen. I feel strong and cheerful. S. S. S. is a fine tonic as proved in my case. I sleep soundly and my appetite is good.

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a well-known physician writes from Ellaville, Georgia: "I use S. S. S. in convalescent fever cases with the best results. It will, in my judgment, prevent summer dysentery, if one will take a few bottles in the spring, thus preparing the bowels for the strains of summer."

Mrs. Scott Liston, 116 Zane street (Island), Wheeling, West Virginia, writes: "Having used S. S. S. for the blood, I can safely say that it beats anything I have used to cleanse the blood and make a new being out of a person."

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, Winston, N. C., writes: "I use it every spring. It always builds me up, gives me appetite and digestion, and enables me to stand the long, trying, enervating hot summer days. On using it I soon become strong of body and easy of mind."

The Chief Justices.

There are three courts of law at Washington presided over by a chief justice; all three chief justices are of New England origin, and curiously enough they were born in contiguous states. The chief justice of the United States (Mr. Fuller) was born in Maine; Chief Justice Bingham, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, was born in New Hampshire; and Chief Justice Richardson, of the Court of Claims, is a native of Massachusetts.

Worse Than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terrible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas of this belt country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately the latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No matter if you have used this remedy before, it will pay you to get a bottle and read the directions, or send for the pamphlet just to learn how to use it economically.

In nine of our manufacturing states the laborers, working under a protective system, have in savings banks over a thousand million dollars; while the vastly greater masses of workingmen in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, the whole United Kingdom, all working under free trade, have less than four million dollars in savings banks.

Rev. Theodore Gerrish has been forced by ill health to resign the pastorate of the Pine street Methodist church of Biddeford.

ALL HANDS LIE DOWN!

The Fearful Sea Fight Between the Albemarle and the Sassacus.

Now came the decisive moment, for by this action, which was in reality a maneuver of our commander, we had acquired a distance from the ram of about 400 yards, and the latter, to evade the Mattabesett, had sheered off a little and lay broadside to us. The Union ships were now on both sides of the ram, with engines stopped. Commander Roe saw the opportunity, which an instant's delay would forfeit, and boldly met the crisis of the engagement. To the engineer he cried, "Crowd waste and oil in the fires and back slowly! Give her all the steam she can carry!" To Acting Master Boutelle he said, "Lay her course for the junction of the casemate and the hull!" Then came four bells, and, with full steam and open throttle, the ship sprang forward like a living thing. It was a moment of intense strain and anxiety. The guns ceased firing, the smoke lifted from the ram, and we saw that every effort was being made to evade the shock. Straight as an arrow we shot forward to the designated spot. Then came the order, "All hands lie down!" and, with a crash that shook the ship like an earthquake, we struck full and square on the iron hull.

Our ship quivered for an instant, but held fast, and the swift plash of the paddles showed that the engines were uninjured. My own station was in the bow, on the main deck, on a line with the enemy's guns. Through the starboard shutter, which had been partly jarred off by the concussion, I saw the port of the ram not ten feet away. It opened, and like a flash of lightning I saw the grim muzzle of a cannon, the straining gun's crew naked to the waist and blackened with powder; then a blaze, a roar and a rush of the shell as it crashed through, whirling me round and dashing me to the deck.

Both ships were under headway, and, as the ram advanced, our shattered bows clinging to the iron casement were twisted round and a solid shot from a Brooke gun almost touching our side crashed through, followed immediately by a cloud of steam and boiling water that filled the forward decks as our overcharged boilers, pierced by the shot, emptied their contents with a shrill scream that drowned for an instant the roar of the guns. The shouts of command and the cries of the scalded, wounded and blinded men mingled with the rattle of small arms that told of a hand to hand conflict above. The ship surged heavily to port as the great weight of water in the boiler was expended, and over the cry, "The ship is sinking!" came the shout, "All hands repel boarders on starboard bow!"

The horrid tumult, always characteristic of battle, was intensified by the cries of agony from the scalded and frantic men. Wounds may rend, and blood may flow, and grim heroism keep the teeth set firm in silence; but to be boiled alive—to have the flesh drop from the face and hands, to strip off in sodden mass from the body as the clothing is torn away in savage eagerness for relief, will bring screams from the stoutest lips. In the midst of all this, when every man had left the engine room, our chief engineer, Mr. Hobby, although badly scalded, stood with heroism at his post; nor did he leave it till after the action, when he was brought up, blinded and helpless, to the deck. I had often before been in battle; had stepped over the decks of a steamer in the Merrimac fight when a shell had exploded covering the deck with fragments of human bodies, literally tearing to pieces the men on the small vessel as she lay alongside the Minnesota, but never before had I experienced such a sickening sensation of horror as on this occasion, when the bow of the Sassacus lay for thirteen minutes on the roof of the Albemarle. An officer of the Wyalusing says that when the dense smoke and steam enveloped us they thought we had sunk, till the flash of our guns burst through the clouds, followed by flash after flash in quick succession, as our men recovered from the shock of the explosion.

In Commander Febiger's report the time of our contact was said to be "some few minutes." To us, at least, there seemed time enough for the other ships to close in on the ram and sink her or sink beside her, and it was thirteen minutes as timed by an officer, who told me, but the other ships were silent, and with stopped engines looked on as the clouds closed over us in the grim and final struggle.—E. Holden, M. D., late U. S. N., in The Century.

How Big Bells Are Rung.

The twelve bells of St. Paul's cathedral in London are said to be the grandest ringing peal in the world. It is a matter of pride with the English that they always swing their bells instead of merely swinging the clappers after the fashion prevailing in Russia and other parts of continental Europe. The Briton swings even his largest bells in the good, old fashioned way, and it is quite an undertaking to swing the sixteen ton "Great Paul," which, with its five-ton brother, supplements the noble peal on the grandest Protestant cathedral in the world. On the day Gen. Garfield's body was carried to the grave, the writer stood in the square in front of St. Paul's, and heard these chimes peal in honor of the dead president. Dense crowds filled the neighboring streets, and the adjacent windows and housetops were black with humanity. All London was there to listen to the mournful requiem of the bells. It was a solemn spectacle when, as a stranger in a strange land, one saw those tens of thousands of Englishmen thus doing honor to the noble dead. It was an evidence of international sympathy, affection and brotherhood which one who saw it can never forget.—Boston Herald.

Growth of City Children.

Quetelet, in his well known treatise "On Man," pointed out that the growth of town children is quicker than that of country children. The demands upon the nutritive powers are larger; and, consequently, we can understand how it comes about that the educational burden is felt more by town children than their country cousins. He showed that the growth is more rapid in girls than boys, and probably the effects of the labor of acquiring education are felt more by the girls.—Good Housekeeping.

His Prize Medal.

Of all his decorations the late Emperor Frederick most prized the medal which was given to him for saving a man from drowning many years ago.—New York Tribune.

A Long Wire.

A Glasgow firm has just finished a brass wire for the Glasgow exhibition 65 miles long and a copper wire 111 miles long.

A baby's face—how pleasant it is to see a human countenance which cannot be insincere.—Hawthorne.

The New Haven Register, democratic, says: "We might as well be frank while we are on the subject, and state the situation as it is. The chances to-day in Connecticut are against the democrats." The Register goes on to argue that the only way the state can be saved for Cleveland and free trade is by exposing the "fallacies" of the protection arguments.

Baking Powders.

The Latest Official Tests as to their Relative Purity.

The present interest in the matter of food adulterations, and the agitation of the question of national and local legislation for the purpose of preventing them have caused more than ordinary attention to be given to the report of the Ohio State Food Commission, which reveals the extent and character of the adulteration found in many of the baking powders of the market. The presence of so large a number of baking powders made from alum, as was found by the commission, has not been suspected, nor was it supposed that some of the cream of tartar and phosphate brands, whose manufacturers have held them up to the public as pure and wholesome, had become so deteriorated by the use of impure ingredients in compounding them.

The Ohio commission examined thirty different kinds for their strength and impurities, and declared that powder the best—as it was of course the purest—which, being of effective strength, contained residuum in smallest quanity. In these baking powders sold in this State the following percentages of residuum or inert matter were found:

NAME.	PER CENT. OF RESIDUUM, ETC.
Royal	7.22
Cleveland's	10.18
Zipp's (alum)	11.93
Sterling	12.63
Dr. Price's	12.66
Jersey (alum)	16.05
Forest City (alum)	24.01
Silver Star (alum)	37.88
De Land's	52.52
Horsford's (phosphate)	36.49
Renion (alum)	38.17
Patapsco (alum)	40.08

The native of the residuum bears directly upon the question of health. That in Royal is declared by the Commission to be perfectly harmless. In the case of the alum powders it is considered hurtful yet the amount found in three of the cream of tartar powders—the Cleveland, Dr. Price's and Sterling—averaged about the same as that in the Crystal, an alum powder. In the phosphate powders the inert matter is exceedingly large, being more than a third of their entire weight.

The importance of the information conveyed by these figures can be best understood by a simple comparison. Take for instance the two first named powders—the Royal and Cleveland's. The inert matter or residuum found in Cleveland's is seen to be about 3 in 7 more than in the other, which is a difference of 40 per cent., the Royal being purer than Cleveland's by a corresponding figure. The inert matter in Horsford's is over five times, or more than 400 per cent., greater than in the Royal. The relative purity of all the brands can be computed in like manner.

Upon the success of our manufactures, as the handmaid of agriculture and commerce, depends in a great measure the independence of our country, and none can feel more sensibly than I do the necessity of encouraging them.—Andrew Jackson.

With President Cleveland, Great Britain knows where she is.—Glasgow Herald.

Congress have repeatedly, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.—George Washington.

President Cleveland declines cautiously to dub himself a free trader, but he caters up a free trade position without disguise. —London Saturday Review.

AFFAIRS IN KITTERY.

KITTERY POINT, ME., Aug. 7th.

The dredging machine at work for the Kittery Fish Co. was towed to Gloucester last Wednesday by the tug Wm. H. Clark, one of the largest boats of the Boston Tow Boat Co.

It was extremely hot here the latter part of last week; quite a change Monday, though.—a northest rain-storm.

The schooner Mary Willey, Williams master, has had a new bowsprit put in while in Bangor, and was towed down the river last Saturday night on her way to this port.

Skipper Chas. Mills, boatman at the Oceanic hotel, Star island, passed a short time with his family last Sunday.

There was a large party from Portsmouth in the vicinity of Weir creek, Gerrish's island, last Sunday, playing ball, boating, bathing, and having a good time in general.

Mrs. John Patch of York, formerly Miss Patience Tobey of Tenney's hill, passed a portion of the Sabbath at her old home. Her father, Mr. Hiram Tobey, is a veteran of the battle of Gettysburg.

The shower of last Sunday evening was a surprise to the good folks who went to meeting; some had a mile and a half to go in the rain, and were not prepared for the same, either.

Jesse Billings has gone to the Oceanic to work the rest of the season.

Schuyler Tobey is at work at the hotel Park Field.

There are 100 guests at the Pepperell, and the hotel Park Field is full.

The Friday evening prayer meetings connected with the Christian church will meet at the parsonage for a time.

UNCLE MOSES.

The grand illumination at York beach, which was set for Wednesday evening, Aug. 8th, has been postponed one week, as in consequence of the date named being "Children's day" at Old Orchard beach the management of the Boston & Maine railroad is unable to furnish extra cars for the York line this evening.

While taking a stroll through Kittery Point the other day, we turned off in a lane near a large church; not far from the road, and on the side of a hill, we found almost a Paradise. It was a pretty, cosy house almost surrounded by plants and flowers of every description; there were about twenty different kinds of geraniums, besides dahlias, petunias, marigolds, bachelor's buttons, nasturtiums, sweet peas, pinks, fuchsias, pansies, heliotrope, mignonette, stocks, (white and pink,) and a host of others we could not name. But by the way we must not forget that elegant bed of portulacas. One thing we failed to see, that we found an abundance of in the rest of our journey—a dog. A. C.

The New York Times says the president will not go to Sorrento. The Times knows all about the president's free trade plans, but in the affairs of land operations, telephones, etc., the Times is not as well informed as are newspapers which have longer worked in the party harness.

THE MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

The municipal election on Tuesday was a very quiet contest, and the vote a very light one, although 114 in excess of that of last year. Mr. Hodgdon's vote fell off twenty-eight, while the republican vote increased 144, making his plurality 172 less than last year. The republicans apparently acted on the principle that the election might carry itself in their favor if it wanted to, for no work was done by them in any of the wards, and the increase of the party vote in every ward was owing solely to the voluntary coming out of more voters. The democratic managers put in a good deal of earnest missionary work with the weak members of their party for two or three days before the election, and they and some of the candidates, especially in wards one and two, were active on election day; and in ward three a split on councilman aided to bring out a full vote.

In ward one there was quite a wide variation in the vote for different persons on the democratic ticket, Patrick Lindley, for councilman, having 288 votes, while Mr. Hodgdon had 322 for mayor, the latter running about a dozen ahead of his party ticket. In this ward there was a mistake made in printing the republican tickets, so that "Washington Scott" received 144 votes intended for Washington Stott for overseer of the poor, Mr. Stott receiving but ten; it made no difference in the result, however, the man on the other side of the fence getting 300 votes.

In ward two Michael J. Griffin had 309 votes for alderman, his associates on the democratic ticket having 245 and 252 respectively. Mr. Griffin evidently added no strength to the ticket, "but he got there all the same."

In ward three, in a total vote of about 150, fifty-one democrats bolted the nomination of Michael F. Canty for councilman, and gave their ballots for Joseph B. Freeman instead; but the bolt was not half big enough to defeat the regular nominee.

The only public demonstration over the election that we heard of in the evening was made by a small boy with a ten-cent trumpet, whose music was interrupted by running the trumpet against a tree box. We felt sorry for the little fellow, even though he was celebrating a democratic victory, and told him so; and we felt still more sorry when he explained that he was a republican, and hadn't heard anything about any election that day, having supposed that Harrison and Morton were not to be elected until November.

We tender our thanks to Mr. Daniel D. Waldron, clerk of ward three, Mr. Richard I. Walden, clerk of ward four, and Samuel R. Gardner, Esq., city messenger, for their courtesy in furnishing us promptly with the election returns on Tuesday evening.

MUSIC HALL.

This evening, in Music hall, Johnson & Slavin's Refined Minstrels will open the fall amusement season with one of their excellent entertainments. There are forty-two people in the company, and the programme is varied enough to suit all tastes except depraved ones. Tickets at Goodrich's.

AN ELIOT PICNIC.

One of the most enjoyable and pleasing events of the season was the picnic of the Advent Sunday school of Eliot, Me., held on Thursday, Aug. 2d, in an orchard owned by Mr. Samuel Dixon. Though this grove had never before been used for such a gathering, it proved to be far superior to most places prepared for such purposes. The number present was about one hundred and twenty-five, composed mostly of children, who after a few hours of usual picnic frolic were gathered together, and seated at an unusually handsome table, prepared bountifully with all the delicacies imaginable. After each and all had been plentifully supplied to their own satisfaction, the remaining portion of the food was distributed among the poor people in the local neighborhood. In the early part of the evening prayer was offered by Elder G. W. Brown, the local minister, and by Mr. E. P. Urch of Chelsea, Mass. The picnic was concluded about 8:30 P. M. by singing "Coronation." The event was highly satisfactory to all present, and many were eager for its continuance.

POLICE COURT.

In the police court on Tuesday, Aug. 7th, Judge Bufford directed Michael Foster, a marine, to hand over $9.90 for one drunk by him had and expended.

Charles Fleming, for the larceny of women's clothing from a house, was fined $25, costs $8.04, and sent to jail in default of payment.

MARITIME NOTES.

The dory Dark Secret, from Point of Pines, Mass., for Liverpool, was spoken Aug. 1st by steamer India, at New York 7th inst. from Trieste, Austria. The little boat was in longitude 51 31 west, about quarter way across the Atlantic; her skipper wanted only to be reported.

The big timber raft was seen about 9:30 P. M., Aug 5th, halfway between Highland light and Race point, making three knots an hour against a strong tide. The raft was seen off Chatham at 8:30 o'clock Tuesday morning, having accomplished the worst part of the passage.

The steamship Gate City came off the mud near Castle island, Boston harbor, shortly after ten o'clock Monday night, apparently uninjured.

The British government has requested the United States to postpone the sale at Port Townsend, Washington territory, of four British schooners, pending an enquiry as to the legality of their seizure.

The sea serpent is helping out the landlords near Watch Hill. It is arranged to have him at Bar Harbor about the time President Cleveland appears at that paradise of real estate operators.

BASE BALL.

If fair weather to-day, the Worcester and Portsmouth clubs will play on the South street grounds this afternoon; game called at 3:30 o'clock.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Albert E. Wood, formerly of this city and this paper, now on the staff of the Morning Journal of New York city, is with Mrs. Wood on a visit to relatives and friends here.

Mr. Jesse H. Wilson leaves the city today for a visit to friends in Massachusetts.

Mr. J. S. Cate, wife and son Edgar, of Everett, Mass., are guests of Mr. C. I. Hutchins and wife of York.

Mr. M. T. Benner, wife and little daughter Beatrice, of Everett, Mass., are guests of Mr. J. A. Littlefield and wife of York, the old homestead of Mrs. Benner.

Buy a refrigerator, oil stove or ice cream freezer now for less than cost at C. W. Taylor's.

The annual picnic of St. Mary's Benevolent Society of this city will take place at Pinkham's grove, Dover point, Aug. 15th.

Auctioneer Morse will on Saturday next at noon sell, on the premises, the Sherburne place at Christian Shore—large three-story house and good stable, and between six and seven acres of land. The house being on a good elevation commands a fine view of the city, river and harbor, as well as of Eliot, Kittery and Newcastle, and is especially suited for a summer residence, summer boarding house or suburban hotel.

Read C. W. Taylor's advertisement in another column. He is closing out his summer wares, such as refrigerators, oil stoves and ice-cream freezers, at very low prices, as he must make room for his fall and winter stock of stoves, ranges and furnaces.

The Walking Beam club of the north end will proceed on their annual excursion to Nantasket beach on the 19th inst.

Mr. William E. Noyes, who has made a partial canvass of this city for the authorized lives of Harrison and Morton, has also taken the agency for "The Republican Party: its History, Principles and Policies," by Ex-Gov. Long of Massachusetts. He is this week in Dover, Great Falls and the western part of York county, Me., but will be in this city again for a few days next week, when all desiring either of the works named can give him their orders.

The hay crop of Rockingham county has been about all secured, in excellent condition generally; the crop is a heavy one, and on many farms the barns have been unable to contain it all. The hay crop of York county, Me., though not yet fully harvested, is reported to be above the average both as to quality and quantity.

The effects of the warm weather of last week—the first real summer weather for a month—were plainly seen in the sudden and great increase of summer travel. The seashore hotels are now nearly all patronized to their full capacity, and some of them beyond it. The Appledore, which has a permanent patronage of old habitues such as few other summer resorts on the coast enjoy, was overcrowded before the hotel weather arrived, but the transient travel on the steamer Oceanic was less during July than in any July for several years; it has been very heavy for a week past, however, and from now to the close of the season the swift and staunch boat will have all she can do.

Don't Wait

Until your hair becomes dry, thin, and gray before giving the attention needed to preserve its beauty and vitality. Keep on your toilet-table a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor—the only dressing you require for the hair—and use a little, daily, to preserve the natural color and prevent baldness.

Thomas Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky., writes: "Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. Tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best hair-restorer in the world."

"My hair was faded and dry," writes Mabel C. Hardy, of Delavan, Ill.; "but after using a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it became black and glossy."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires vigilance, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

OH, WHAT A COLD!

This is the season for sudden changes in the weather, and a great many "take cold" either in their Head or on their Lungs, causing Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. These troubles can be soon relieved and cured by taking Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific, which acts directly on the Throat and Lungs, entirely removing these difficulties.

Cured his boy of Croup.

C. M. BROOKS, Lowell, Mass., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific as a cure for Coughs, Colds, and Croup. I used it in my family last winter with the best results. Two or three doses cured my little boy of Croup, for which I am very thankful."

You can cure that Cough in a short time. You can cure your Catarrh if you persist in its use, as it will stop the secretion of Catarrhal matter in the head; it will relieve Croup in from three to five minutes.

The best he ever saw.

"The best medicine for Coughs and Consumptive Complaints that ever I saw is Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific," so says JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of Boston.

Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific is sold by all Druggists. Price 50 cents and $1. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

FIFTY CENTS A DAY.

Meals at City Restaurants During the Hot Season—The Menu.

Summer is the season when the cheap table d'hote flourishes. An immense number of the regular residents of the city are turned into a sort of floating population by the fact that their wives and families have gone into the country, and they float in the sense that while they sleep at home in a darkened house or linen shrouded flat the hearth fires are quenched—not to mention those in the range—and they are reduced to a sort of skirmish for their meals, getting a dinner at Coney Island today, at a down town cafe to-morrow, luncheon anywhere from the elegant cafe to the free lunch counter of a barroom. This sort of business can be made very expensive, or a man can live well on fifty cents a day. Don't believe that? Well, there's a struggling young lawyer here who does it. This is what he says about the matter:

"I sleep in the house of my cousin, who is at Newport for the season. Got a fine four story brown stone affair just off Fifth avenue, and as she knew I was hard up she asked me to come and stay there while she was away, and the colored lady who is care taker of the house 'does' for me as a part of her duties, a semi-occasional half dollar rendering her perfectly reconciled to my presence. I am up by 8, and on my way down town I stop at a Sixth avenue bakery that lies between me and the Elevated. It has one outside room, with chairs and tables, and you can get coffee—good coffee, too—for five cents a cup. Their buns are fresh and hot at that time of the day and you can get five of them for five cents, or a sandwich for the same sum, if you happen to be a hearty eater and require meat in the morning. If you are a gilt edged epicure you can get a slice of pie. But as for me, I'm a plain, homely minded sort of person, and I find five buns more filling. So my breakfast costs me ten cents.

"About 1 o'clock my stomach goes into executive session and begins to vote lunch appropriations by acclamation. There's a place down on lower Broadway, near my office, that I patronize—indeed, there are two of the same kind, near together, but I've a faithful sort of disposition and I stick to the one nearest me. All the bank clerks and the young and impecunious lawyers like myself go to these places between 1 and 3, but I've seen lots of men who get their dinners at Delmonico's come in there hurriedly for luncheon, and get it for fifteen cents. You know the millionaires never scorn to save nickels. It's not so swell as the bakery. There are no tables or chairs—just a long counter, with big dishes of everything piled within reach, and every single thing costs just five cents. You help yourself to anything you like the looks of—sandwiches, doughnuts, cakes, pies, hard boiled eggs, buns, etc.—and then the man behind the counter passes you out milk, coffee, tea, lemonade, as you choose, and that's five cents, too.

"When you're through you tell the man what you've had, he gives you a check, and you settle up with the cashier near the door. I generally present him with the munificent sum of one dime and a nickel, and don't go away hungry, either. That seems like a lot of confidence to trust the lunchee to tell how much he has had; but just let any tramp go in there and try to beat the management, and he'll find out double quick whether any one's glittering eye has been upon him. Summer weather one doesn't want much to eat while you are working, but when the day is done you feel the need of something more staying than the everlasting buns and sandwiches; a good square meal, in short, and I know where I can get that same for 25 cents.

"There are half a dozen places where you can get it, and the menu is not so bad as you might think. There is soup, barley, vegetable or consomme; a bit of fish, with a boiled potato; lamb, mutton, veal or beef, some kind of vegetable, a spoonful of stewed fruit for dessert, or you may take cheese instead, and then you get coffee, with bread ad libitum, throughout the meal. The peck of dirt is not thrown in, thank Heaven. My place is on Third avenue, but it's as clean as the Brunswick. The waiters wear white jackets, but they're white, and the people see they are all clean and respectable themselves, for it's the decentest dinner for the sum that I've ever seen, and I have had some experience, I can tell you. I ante up my little American quarter, and then I am fed for the day at the reasonable sum of 50 cents."

There are twenty nice restaurants on the good avenues where a capital table d'hote can be had for fifty cents with a half bottle of vin ordinaire thrown in, while the Italian eating places out it down as low as thirty cents, but wine is left out. Actresses out of employment club together and dine at these places, and by three ordering for two, which gives them all enough, they fare sumptuously every day on about the sum usually reckoned sufficient to keep a bird alive. There are still better, almost elaborate dinners to be had for seventy-five cents and $1, and at these places you will find the newspaper and literary men these hot evenings, with sprinklings of the professionals and artists.—New York Cor. Brooklyn Eagle.

Horseshoes of India Rubber.

The proposed substitution of india rubber for metal in the manufacture of horseshoes is based upon various supposed advantages, one of these being that the former enables a horse to go easily over all kinds of roads and rough or slippery ground without slipping. The contrivance brought forward for this purpose is such as to obviate in one instance the necessity of using an iron shoe which can be moved momentarily when the horse is not traveling, and can also be used when the horse is shod with an iron shoe.—Mechanical News.

A Changeable Landscape.

A weather prognosticator and amateur artist of Prague has painted a landscape colored with the salts of cobalt. The colors are very sensitive in moist weather. These are made still more so by the mixture of gelatine. With an increasing amount of moisture in the atmosphere, the blue red hue and the picture assume a dirty as well as the green grass and foliage, strikingly as the background, etc., are also strikingly changed in color.—Philadelphia Times.

A Pleasant Feature.

He—Did you read my story in the current number of The Everyother Monthly Magazine, Miss Smith?"

She—Yes, and liked it very much.

He—Thanks. Well written—eh?

She—Very; and so delightfully short, you know.—Harper's Bazar.

An Enterprising Clothier.

An enterprising clothier advertises guaranteeing a wife to every man who buys a suit of clothes. This is no inducement at all. What would do for this country better would be a guarantee of a suit of clothes to every man who has a wife.—London Tid Bits.

Houses of Mormons.

In Salt Lake city the houses of the Mormons all have two doors, even the smallest of them. Some have also two woodsheds and two wells. A house that is begun with only one room is frequently lengthened out room by room and door by door as new wives are taken.—Chicago Times.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachel's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

I have been a great sufferer from dry catarrh for many years, and I tried many remedies which helped me, but I had none which did me so much benefit as Ely's Cream Balm. It completely cured me.—M. J. Lally, 39 Woodward Ave., Boston Highlands, Mass.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head—for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs. Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

Just Married.

How loving they are; this is always a sure sign. After the first year sometimes it don't hold good. When Charles comes home to you grouty and cross, snapping and snarling, unable to realish the nice dinner you have cooked, and feels as if there is a ton of pig iron in his stomach, he is troubled with dyspepsia, and Sulpher Bitters is the only medicine that will cure him.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is designed for those who need a medicine to purify their blood. No other preparation so well meets this want. It increases the appetite and rejuvenates the whole system. Its record, for forty years, is one of constant triumph over disease.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

West Unity, a small Ohio town, was almost swept out of existence by fire last week. Thirteen stores were entirely destroyed, loss from $75,000 to $100,000.

Experience Has Taught Him.

St. Paul Dame—Charley, I like light housekeeping, but this bedroom is too crowded to suit me. I've filled every nook and corner in it, and now I've got to put that dirty linen under the bureau.

The Rolling Pencil.

Never endure the trifling but none the less real annoyance of rolling pencil or penholder, when by merely sticking a roughly squared lump of sealing wax on the end, the rolling tendency is checked forever. Sticking the pencil or penholder through a small square bit of cardboard answers the same purpose, but the cardboard is liable to slip off, or bend out of shape.—"H. S. B." in The Writer.

Artesian Well Pressure.

Sometimes the pressure of an artesian flow of water results from a gas pressure instead of from a high head of water. Dakota, for instance, has several artesian wells 1,000 feet deep, with 250 to 280 pounds pressure, but there are no high places near by to give this head of water. —New York Sun.

In the Amusing Comedietta Of "Used Up,"

Sir Charles Coldstream, a blase man of fashion, is made to deprecate everything in which everybody else is supposed to take an interest, with the languid remark that "there is really nothing in it." He even extended the criticism to the crater of Vesuvius, "down which he looked but saw "nothing in it." Such characters are scarcer on this side of the Atlantic than abroad, but they exist here notwithstanding. Such men need a "fillip to nature" to medicinally stimulate their jaded appetite, overcome their lassitude, and renew the zest of existence. They and others upon whom the world's enjoyments are beginning prematurely to pall, will find in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a welcome and speedy renewal of vigor and health. Appetite returns, dyspeptic and bilious symptoms disappear, the nerves grow strong, and the hour of retirement is unfraught with apprehension of uneasy repose when this superlative tonic is employed. It remedies fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester. eowtjan89

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,

The Discipline of Genius.

It is still the fashion in certain quarters to depreciate collegiate education by citing the examples of men who have risen to eminence in various intellectual callings without having been trained in the schools. We are bidden to observe that many of the world's greatest orators, poets, and statesmen, as well as some men whose names stand high on the rolls of art and science, were "the untaught children of nature." Whence is drawn the inference, expressed or implied, that, after all, elaborate mental training is of doubtful value, even if it be not a positive hindrance in the struggle for success. This kind of talk, at all times sufficiently common, is especially rife each year immediately after the close of the commencement season. The present, therefore, seems to be a good opportunity for stating a few plain facts in refutation of a mischievous and groundless delusion. Of course no one denies that individual instances of splendid mental achievement by persons not liberally educated may be easily pointed out; but to assume that, as a rule, these men were "untaught" is to commit an egregious blunder. Whenever the veil is lifted and the world gets a glimpse of the inner life of one of these "diamonds in the rough," it is discovered that the diamond was most assiduously polished. That the polishing was not done by professional lapidaries in institutions established for the purpose is a fact of minor importance.

A favorite instance with the deriers of culture is Patrick Henry. But the most recent and authentic biography of the famous revolutionary orator shows that the popular impression about him is all wrong in so far as it conceives Mr. Henry to have been an untrained prodigy of genius. In the first place his schooling was much more and better than tradition has accounted it; and in the second place, instead of leaping at a bound into fame and fortune, he climbed by slow, toilsome steps. Instead of neglecting the books and trusting to torrents of eloquence for success at the bar, Patrick Henry was, through all his early career, a patient, plodding student, both of law and general literature.

A still more familiar instance is that of Robert Burns. Certainly he affords a wonderful example of genius triumphant over adverse conditions. His schooling was indeed meager. Yet it is doubtful whether any poet was ever better trained, even in the technicalities of his art. It is a thousand pities that those who talk so glibly about Burns as a poet of nature and nothing else, do not read his autobiography. In that too brief story of himself the immortal Scottish bard lets us see the process through which he went in learning to do his work. It was a process exactly the same in all essentials, as that which is repeated year after year by collegians of the present time. In the deplored absence of living teachers, Robert Burns sought instruction from books. He studied words, made lists of rhymes, analyzed sentences in prose and verse, diligently gave heed to all the printed directions for the formation of style which came within his reach, observed and investigated, with a view to avoiding like errors, specimens of bad poetry, and unsparingly criticised his own productions in the light of all the knowledge gained by unwearied efforts.—Boston Advertiser.

Presentation to the Queen.

I don't suppose one lady or gentleman out of 5,000 in England ever dreams of being presented to the queen. It is, of course, quite proper to the whole 5,000 to do so. But it is quite unnecessary. Some people think that by being presented at court they get invited to state balls and concerts and to entertainments given by the Prince of Wales. There is a great mistake in regard to this. Here is where the error is. No one can be invited to a state entertainment unless he or she has been presented at court. Presentation is a sine qua non. But it is not the only thing necessary. There are other considerations which have to be taken into account. I don't fancy that more than one person out of 100 who are presented at court ever gets an invitation to a state ball or concert at Buckingham palace, or to a Prince of Wales garden party at Marlborough house.

The other ninety-nine might have been presented, so far as being asked to state entertainments is concerned. For American ladies or gentlemen to rush over to England and spend a lot of money on court dresses, in the hope that the day after the drawing room they will be asked to dinner with the queen, or to luncheon with the Prince of Wales, is a fondly cherished delusion from which time will soon awaken them. Presentation has grown so common in these days that it is a wonder to me that any sensible person, not compelled to undergo the ordeal, care to submit themselves to it. After all, cui bono? Is the game worth the candle? It is a pretty sight, no doubt; but if curiosity be the motive, what becomes of the respect to the queen? It is quite useless to say anything. Americans will keep on flocking to the drawing rooms and levees and giving the legation something to do.—The Argonaut.

Ecuador and Its Capital.

The road to Quito is a mountain path fit only for mules, and not passable six months in the year. The custom house is built of pine from Maine and corrugated iron from Pennsylvania. The Guayaquil steamers were built in Baltimore. Ice factories abound; fresh water is brought twenty miles and peddled in casks. The finest pineapples in the world come from this country, and excellent hats and hammocks. All the Panama hats we wear which are genuine are made in Guayaquil. It is 320 miles from this place to Quito, and freight costs $1 per 100 pounds to be sent up. It takes twenty-four men in two divisions to carry a piano up. Nevertheless, American goods, after they get up to Quito, compete with the native manufactures. Nearly all the furniture in Quito is brought from the United States in parts, and in that highest and oldest city in America many of the people sleep on Grand Rapids (Mich.) beds. Twelve breweries in Quito import their hops chiefly from America, and the sugar used there is mainly refined in our country. Ecuador has 1,000,000 inhabitants, but only forty-seven postoffices. No interior postage is charged on newspapers of any kind; but there is no newspaper outside of Guayaquil in Ecuador.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

HUNTING IN ALASKA.

Killing a Bear—Indian Superstition—A Deer Hunt—A Night Camp.

After tracking two days my companion and myself secured two natives as guides, and, leaving the river, set off for the mountains. At the end of the first day's tramp we sighted a black bear feeding upon berries about a mile distant. We were both so exhausted from our tiresome walk across the tundra that we concluded to send one of the guides after the bear. The Indian first seated himself and examined his rifle, selecting three cartridges and placing them in the gun. He then pulled a few hairs from his clothing, which he threw in the air to ascertain the direction of the wind, and then started so as to come up to leeward of the bear. We kept careful watch through a glass, and saw him on hands and knees work slowly toward the animal. When within 150 yards he fired two shots. The bear jumped and fell almost in his tracks.

There are probably no more superstitious people in the world than the northern Alaska Indians. Every action of their daily life is governed by some belief handed down from father to son, or originated by the shaman, the Indian doctor, who holds great sway over them. The ceremonies attending the killing of the bear will illustrate. Bruin was first placed upon his back with the head toward the mountains. The head was then skinned, severed from the body and taken by one of the natives, who, placing himself astride of the dead animal, raised and lowered the head three times, touching the bear just over the heart each time and muttering some incantation. The third time he threw it from him, uttering a loud shout in which the other natives joined. This was done to drive the bear's spirit to the mountains so that it would cause them no future trouble. A part of the dead animal had to be left on the spot where he was killed, or the hunters would get no deer that season. A camp was made at the place, and after the head had been roasted and picked clean it was placed in the top of a high tree, but for what purpose they would not tell. The skin was stretched flat upon the tundra—fur side down. The portion of the bear not consumed was placed in a tree and a rude scarecrow made to keep away birds. The following winter the skin and meat were sledged for and found in good condition.

A deer hunt which we witnessed was so different from our previous conceptions that I think it worthy a description. Upon this occasion, while sleighing with a party of Indians, a herd of deer was sighted. The natives took their rifles and started, some going in one direction and some in another, but all keeping to leeward of the deer. Those who went directly toward the herd waited until the others had got partly around before starting. The first shot was the signal, whereupon all hands rushed toward the frightened animals, who separated and plunged blindly in every direction. The Indians shouted, making all the noise possible, the fleeing animals in their fear mistaking Indians for deer and rushing on until a shot showed them their error, when they would turn and flee as blindly as before. Even after the first fright they circled around the danger, trying to get together, and in this way many more were killed. As much meat as could be carried was loaded upon the sled, while the remainder was cached in the snow, to be sledged for at some future time.

After a hard day's march, a camp was established, it being then too dark to travel. The dogs are first unharnessed, and chained separately to bushes to prevent fighting. After an hour's rest they are fed upon dried fish, this being the only meal they receive in twenty-four hours. They are given all they can eat, unless the supply is short, and in such cases their endurance is wonderful, a small piece of fish once a day sufficing a dog and enabling him to work for a couple of weeks. A great many interesting facts could be given illustrating the sagacity and endurance of these animals. As a rule they have no affection. They recognize the person who feeds them as their master, but they obey only through fear. They are more than half wolf, as all young wolves caught are raised and used as dogs. In every team there is generally one dog who constitutes himself master. He is naturally one of the most powerful of the number, and the others seem to recognize his supremacy. This dog, upon seeing any one of the others habitually shirking while the rest are pulling, will attempt to reach and punish him, and if it is impossible to do so while in harness, will deliberately go to him when the day's sledging is finished and administer the deserved chastisement.

In establishing a night camp when in a wooded country, the most sheltered spot is selected and a pit is dug in the snow about fifteen feet in diameter and a foot deep. The bottom is then stamped down to make a hard floor. Around this pit is built a wall about four feet high, by laying young spruce trees on top of one another and cutting off their inside branches. This wall has two openings or breaks diametrically opposed, dividing the pits into halves with a through passageway separating them. Along this way, which must always face the wind, dried wood is piled and fired. On either side pine boughs are laid on the snow, and on top of them the sleeping bags. Such night camps are easily made, and the coldest nights can be comfortably passed in them. The only drawback is the difficulty in getting the wood.

In conclusion, the Indians of Alaska have been reported as savage and treacherous. In my experience I found the natives of interior northern Alaska the most kind and hospitable people in the world.—W. L. Howard in Popular Science Monthly.

Character of Dreams.

Any marked increase in the number or change in the character of dreams should be seriously considered. They are sometimes the precursors of a general nervous and mental prostration. In such cases habits of diet and exercise, work and rest, should be examined. If dreams which depress the nervous energies and render sleep unrefreshing occur frequently, medical counsel should be taken. The habit of remembering and narrating dreams is pernicious; to act upon them is to surrender rational self control.—J. M. Buckley in The Century.

Defenders of American Industry.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

The Republican Outlook in New York.

The Boston Sunday Herald concludes a long and careful review of the political situation in New York as follows: "Such in brief is the situation in New York to-day, and it certainly seems to afford sufficient ground for the confidence that prevails among the cool and cautious leaders at headquarters who are managing the campaign. The number of letters from democrats who voted for Cleveland in 1884, and who will vote for Harrison this year, that have been received at the republican headquarters is simply astonishing. Some of these men may drift back under high party pressure in the campaign, but their letters show how intense is the feeling that prevails in the manufacturing towns against the democratic tariff policy. With a conceded majority for Harrison in the state, outside the two big cities, larger by 10,000 to 15,000 than that received by Blaine, and a reduction of Cleveland's majority in New York city and Brooklyn, of which there is every probability, to the extent of at least 15,000, a republican majority in the state of 20,000 to 30,000 is a claim for which there is a solid foundation."

Worse Than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terrible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas of this belt country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately the latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No matter if you have used this remedy before, it will pay you to get a bottle and read the directions, or send for the pamphlet just to learn how to use it economically.

At the Wharves of Havana.

Along the low, crowded, quaint wharves on the Havana side, by the Catalina warehouses, skirting the Regla docks and storehouses, or severed at various points in the bay by these picturesque lighters and their noisy lancheros, are barks and barkentines, brigs and brigantines, two, three and four masted schooners and full rigged ships, discharging and receiving cargoes. Here are Dutch barks and brigs discharging coal from Cardiff. They will receive sugar or molasses for Philadelphia or New York, and there load with general cargoes for some European port. Norwegian barks, brigs and brigantines have brought coal from the Baltic and tiles from France and Spain. French brigs and barks are discharging cargoes of tiles from Marseilles. Here are Spanish vessels with linen and wines from Barcelona. All manner of queer Portuguese craft are here with onions and garlic and flour. From Halifax have come vessels with general cargoes of onions, cabbage, potatoes, apples and salt fish. From South America have come brigs and brigantines, with the general air and build of Spanish craft, and these have brought wheat, fruit and tassajo or jerked beef, olives, sweet oil, bacon, butter, lard, figs and brandy. From Vera Cruz and Mexico have come what our American sea folk are pleased to term "tramp" steamers, with hundreds of bulls for the bull fights and for meat; and American and Canadian vessels bring hither three-fourths of the entire food staples consumed by the people of Cuba.—Edgar L. Wakeman's Letter.

Try Not to Cough.

A physician who is connected with an institution which contains many children says: "There is nothing more irritating to a cough than to cough. For some time I had been so fully assured of this that I recently determined if possible, for one minute, at least, to lessen the number of coughs heard in a certain ward in the hospital of the institution. By the promise of rewards and punishments I succeeded in inducing them simply to hold their breath when tempted to cough, and in a little while I was myself surprised to see how some of the children recovered entirely from their disease.

"Constant coughing is precisely like scratching a wound on the outside of the body; so long as it is done the wound will not heal. Let a person when tempted to cough draw a long breath and hold it until it warms and soothes every air cell, and some benefit will soon be received from the process. The nitrogen which is thus retained acts as an anodyne to the irritated mucus membrane, allaying the desire to cough and giving the throat and lungs a chance to heal. At the same time a suitable medicine will aid nature in her effort to recuperate."—Baltimore News.

Behavior in the Sick Room.

The etiquette of the sick room should be better understood. Many a patient, nervous and excited, has literally had the life forced out and gone to the grave through uneasiness or fright over his mysterious surroundings. There is no time when a man or woman more needs to have natural and cheerful people about them than when tossing on a sick bed. Talking in the room should always be done in a natural tone of voice, and never in whispers. There should be no tiptoeing and no long faces, or discussions over this or that grave symptom. The doctor that don't bring a breeze of cheerfulness with him to the sick room had better quit business and go to the undertaker's trade. There are many forms of disease where the patient is killed or cured, not by any remedies, but by the indiscretion or discretion of the physician and attendants.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Artists' Home Decorations.

Artists' ideas of decorating their own quarters differ from their ideas of decorating rich men's houses, and for reasons sufficient to themselves. They beautify the house of wealth expensively, but for their studios and apartments they much prefer such trappings as a lot of sail or tent cloth, fish nets, turkey red chintz, old swords, the rough bark of trees, dried flowers, old straw hats and various other things at which the junk shop man would turn up his nose in contempt. The value of all this debris is greatly enhanced in the artist's opinion if everything is thickly covered with dust. Then it is unmistakably artistic. Some of the studios in this city are fearfully and wonderfully filled.—New York Press "Every Day Talk."

Mad Over Vegetarianism.

A man made mad over vegetarianism was a curious inmate of a Pennsylvania hospital. The sight of any animal, bird, insect or reptile, slain at the hand of man, would send him into paroxysms of hysteric rage. He would wear no shoes, in order to kill the fewer animalculæ as he walked. Every shoe or woolen article of clothing that came in his reach he would destroy; a funeral would fill him with frenzy, for he held that the dead should be carried into the woods and covered with leaves; while his vegetarian ideas as to food were equally pronounced. On every occasion possible he would slip off to eat grass, each blade of which he would carefully wipe in order to preclude the destruction of an insect.—Good Housekeeping.

Keep It to Yourself.

"Take my advice," said an elderly man about town, "and don't 'swear off' doing this or that thing. If you have a habit which you think is hurting you either physically or morally, just determine to yourself to stop it, but don't spread it broadcast among your friends. You will be exposed to less temptation, have more chances of keeping your good resolution, and, in the event of a failure, no one but yourself will be the wiser. There's nothing like holding the respect of other people, and if they know you can't do a thing that is wholly for your own good they'll never think well of you." It's good advice, too.—Philadelphia Call.

Astronomy's Boom.

Astronomy is likely to have a boom in the United States. Among the institutions that have projected or just completed new observatories of importance are Iowa college, Carleton college, Smith college, Lake Forrest university and Bates college.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Discarding Rubbers.

The fashion of discarding rubbers in wet weather and having the shoes oiled instead was set by the police, letter carriers and car drivers, and is now being followed by thousands, whose feet are injured by wearing rubbers. Those who have to face a winter out of doors and who complain that rubbers pain or cripple them, unite in declaring that to keep the feet warm and dry it is only necessary to wear shoes a size or two too large, oil them and put in a felt or cork insole under a woolen stocking.—New York Sun.

Mr. Cleveland's Blunder.

All over the country democrats—yes, the "life long democrats"—are deserting the exponent of the interest of British manufacturers, and giving their reasons. The following was written by a prominent Irish American contractor of Elizabeth, N. J. It is to the point. It voices the sentiments of thousands of adopted citizens who see how Ireland and the Irish are sought to be ignored save for the purpose of voting for England's interest.

"It is perfectly true that I shall vote for Harrison. I am done with Cleveland and that chiefly because I do not believe him to be a true democrat. If he was, he would have never written that English free-trade message of his. Besides, his behavior during the four years he has occupied the White House has been anything but democratic. I have been a democrat all my life, and voted for Cleveland in 1884 because I thought he was a pure man, but I fail to see where the purity comes in. I honor a straight out-and-out republican, or any man who is not afraid to show his true colors, but I despise a hypocrite such as Cleveland has proved himself to be. Free trade stands not a ghost of a show, because the American people will not have it. Yes, indeed, there are many democrats who will vote as I intend to hereabouts, and I could give you their names, but you will hear from them in November. There are eight votes solid for Harrison under my roof alone. It is my opinion that the thinking democrats are heartily ashamed of the present administration, as Cleveland will know in November."

Oil Rockets for Use at Sea.

The result of the scientific tests of Meisser's new invention, an oil rocket designed to calm the raging of a troubled sea, appear to have been satisfactory enough to warrant the hope that shipwrecks will be rare occurrences ere many years. Four rockets, the same in appearance as those commonly used in ordinary pytrotechnical displays, but with the exploding cap removed and a light tin cylinder holding one pound of train oil substituted, were sent up at varying angles of projection, the result being that the sea was calmed for thousands of feet round about the spot above which they exploded and fell. The oil spread into a thin silk-like sheet, which, extending rapidly, appeared to have the power of keeping the waves within peaceable limits. As the rockets can be carried with convenience and sent up without trouble, there is reason surely why the enterprising steamship companies should not at once recognize their utility, and add a number to the equipment of each steamer sufficient for the necessities of the average voyage.

A Soldier Honored.

On the 8th inst. a bronze statue of the late General G. K. Warren, chief of engineers of the army of the Potomac, was unveiled on Little Round Top, Gettysburg. The statue stands upon the boulder on which General Warren stood when he discovered Hood's attempt to turn Meade's flank, and represents him at that moment. The statute is erected under the auspices of the general's old command (Fifth New York,) and is of heroic size, being eight feet one inch in height and weighing 1500 pounds. He is represented as dressed in full major-general's uniform, with a field-glass in his hand. The statue was modelled by Carl Gerhardt of Hartford, Conn., and cost $5000. It is one of the finest monuments at Gettysburg.

Probate Judge Young, of Strafford county, has sustained the will of the late John B. Dowe of Rochester, who left all his property, including $4000 in money, to a Mrs. Young. Dowe left neither parents, wife nor children, but more distant relatives disputed the will.

A large gang of workmen arrived at Laconia on the 7th inst. to commence the work of grading the Lake Shore railroad, which now seems likely to become an accomplished fact, after being talked about for twenty-five years. The contractor is under bonds to complete the grading of the roadbed by Dec. 10th.

The table manufactory of Shattuck Bros. & Co., at Nashua, was burned Aug. 7th. Loss $3000; insurance $1500.

Capt. Wm. Palmer of Medford, Mass., fell from a stage while painting a building Aug. 7th, and was killed. He was captain of Co. G, First New Hampshire Cavalry, during the rebellion, and served under Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

It may be admitted that large reductions in the duties on imported manufactured goods would produce great distress in many parts of the United States. The free importation of iron, coal and wool would be a great boom to British producers. * * * If it were accompanied with reductions in the tariff upon cotton, woolen and other manufactures the artisans of this country would derive a marked benefit from it.—The Scotsman.

PORTSMOUTH & DOVER RAILROAD.

And Messrs. Jones, Marcy, Walker, Hodgdon, Guppy, Christie and Lowell were declared elected.

At a meeting of the directors held immediately after the adjournment of the stockholders' meeting, Frank Jones was chosen president, George L. Treadwell treasurer, and Calvin Page clerk.

RAILROAD ITEMS.

On Tuesday morning, the 7th inst., as the Pullman train from Bangor for Boston was crossing the Noble's island bridge it struck the gates, which the gate-tender had neglected to open, and effectually demolished them. New gates were put in place next day.

A special train of six cars, containing about 400 people, many of whom were from Hampton and Rye beaches, left this city at 7:45 o'clock A. M. on the 8th inst. for Old Orchard, that day being "Children's day" at Old Orchard beach.

Plans have been made for a Union station of all the railroads leading north and east of Boston, in Causeway street. Negotiations for the purchase of the present station of the Boston & Maine railroad in Haymarket square are in progress. The new building will be an extension of the present Lowell railroad station.

ACCIDENTAL.

One of the gang of men employed in unloading railroad ties at the Concord railroad wharf on the afternoon of the 8th inst., while standing on top of a car-load of ties from the barque Blanche was struck by a sling-load that was being lowered from the vessel to the car, knocked off, and had a small bone in one forearm broken near the wrist. Dr. Whittier set the bone.

The following was sent from Biddeford on the 8th inst.: "Walter Abbott, aged fourteen, who was a passenger on the excursion train from Portsmouth for Old Orchard this morning, jumped from the train at the Biddeford station, and in attempting to get on again lost his footing and was dragged quite a distance. His arm was broken in two places, his leg bruised, and he received injuries about the head."

PERSONAL.

Mrs. J. L. Frisbee and daughter, Miss Isa E. Frisbee, of this city, are at the Weirs.

Mrs. Charles C. Harvey of Boston, formerly of this city, is visiting Mrs. Tobey of State street.

Mrs. M. E. Shedd and daughter, of State street, will pass several weeks at Norway, Me.

Mrs. H. A. Wells and Miss Alberta Green started on the 8th inst. for a trip to Philadelphia, Cape May and Wilmington, Del.

Mr. John P. Brooks, of Jamaica Plain, Mass., has returned to his home from a short visit to relatives and friends in North Kittery. Mrs. Brooks, who came from Massachusetts with her husband, will remain in Kittery until September, visiting her uncles, John Wentworth, Esq., of North Kittery, and Dr. M. F. Wentworth of the Foreside.

First Asst. Engr. Oliver P. Remick, United States revenue marine, who was recently granted leave of absence with permission to leave the United States, will sail from New York on the 18th inst. by the steamship City of New York, to accompany his sister Mrs. Grant, wife of Capt. Charles E. Grant of the steamship Vaderland, to her home in Antwerp, Belgium. Mrs. Grant has been passing several months at the home of her parents, Mr. Harrison Remick and wife of Kittery.

Mr. Alfred Ives of East Hadley, province of Quebec, is visiting his friend and relative Charles E. Boynton, Esq., of this city. East Hadley is only fifteen miles across the line from the state of Vermont. Mr. Ives says that the boundary between the Dominion of Canada and the United States is only an imaginary one, and also that Canada expects very soon to annex the whole of the United States; in which case it would be quite doubtful whether the capitol would be at Ottawa or Washington city.

ELIOT ITEMS.

ELIOT, ME., Aug. 7th.

A great fete is to be held Aug. 21st and 22d, and perhaps the 23d, in the field in front of Prof. Farmer's residence. A tent 110 feet long will be raised, and in it will be exhibited all kinds of work, of foreign countries as well as of the United States. The Hungarian Gypsey band of the hotel Wentworth will furnish music one day, and the Salem band the next. Further details next week. The proceeds will go to the Library Association fund, to help erect a suitable building for the library.

Anna Remick, daughter of Samuel Remick, while riding horseback last week was thrown off, and had one elbow dislocated. Both doctors were away, and it was four hours before the arm was set. She is slowly recovering.

F. M. Dixon, artist photographer at South Berwick, has been photographing the residences in this town, to be on exhibition at the coming fete.

A picnic was held on Friday, Aug. 3d, on Frank Fort island, by the children at Rosemary Cottage.

Dr. E. H. Dixon and sister are at Alton Bay camp ground. Also Oliver Athorne and wife.

Mrs. Abbie Brown had a narrow escape from a bad accident not long since. She was thrown from the doorsteps by a small dog, and fell upon her arm, but though she was considerably hurt, fortunately no bones were broken.

Mrs. Willard is the guest of John H. Staples and wife for a few weeks.

The Methodist Sunday school will have a picnic at York beach on Wednesday, Aug. 15th, if pleasant, and have invited the people of North Kittery to join them. They will leave the church at seven o'clock sharp. If stormy on the 15th, the picnic will be held on the next fair day.

The republicans held their caucus on Saturday evening, Aug. 4th, and chose William Hill, Abner Lord and Sylvester Bartlett as delegates to the convention.

MARITIME NOTES.

The Whale's-back foghorn, which made no great noise in the world during June and the larger part of July, is now proclaiming itself most of the time.

The yacht America, not Gen. Butler's boat of that name but the one commanded by Capt. Thomas Clarkson of Kittery Point, was on Wednesday, the 8th inst., loading at Broughton's wharf with lumber for building summer cottages at Gerrish's island.

Another square-rigged vessel, a brigantine under the English flag, arrived at the Concord railroad wharf on Wednesday, the 8th inst.

The Joggins timber raft arrived at Vineyard Haven on the 8th inst., seven days out, in good condition. The tugs took coal and water, and intended to resume the voyage at noon should the weather be favorable.

The schooner William A. Dubosque, a frequent visitor at this port for a couple of years past, went to pieces on Straitsmouth island, Cape Ann, on the 7th inst.

The schooner Mary H. Lewis, which arrived at Portland on the 6th inst., reported having picked up at sea, fifty miles south of Nova Scotia, the day before, Capt. Doughty, two other men, a woman and two children. The castaways were in an open boat twenty-one feet long, with two dories in tow. They were driven to sea by a gale while attempting to go from one Nova Scotia port to another with their goods and chattels; their provisions were spoiled by salt water, and when rescued they were nearly dead from exhaustion, hunger, thirst and exposure. Capt. Doughty was formerly connected with the Salvation Army at Portland, and was charged with committing bigamy there. The Portland officials are looking for him.

The sea serpent has again been seen, this time appearing on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 4th, off Point Judith, R. I., to two fishermen in the sloop Mary Lewis of East Greenwich. Captain Delory, master of the sloop, first sighted a montrous head about two feet above the water, and about fifty yards distant on the weather quarter. The appearance of the head is described as in general shape like that of an alligator: the jaws looked to be at least five feet in length and were studded with teeth five or six inches long, while the eyes were as large as the crown of an ordinary hat. Directly back from the head ran a huge fin, which was kept rigidly straight as the body was propelled at a rapid rate through the water, the motion being similar to that of a snake in its sinuous windings on shore. The entire length of the creature, as estimated in his passing the boat, was reckoned at least seventy feet. The captain says it was within about ten feet as it swept by, heading east southeast. Glimpses of its body, which was about the size of a barrel, showed bright grayish scales of large size. This is beyond all odds the worst sea serpent we ever heard of; the old kind never had no such head as that. Nor any such teeth. We do not at all approve of this revised version.

During a "norther" at Valparaiso, Chili, on the night of Aug. 6th, two large barques, one English and the other French, sank in the harbor after being in collision; the crew of the British vessel, seventeen in number, were all drowned, as were seven of the French crew. Five other vessels were driven ashore in the harbor and dashed to pieces, but no loss of life is reported.

The parade of the Johnson & Slavin Minstrel Co. at noon on the 8th inst. was a very fine one, and in the evening the combination gave a fine entertainment in Music hall to a good audience.

The interior of the Methodist church is undergoing a complete renovation. New carpets are being laid, and the walls of the audience room tinted. A new chandelier will be put in, and it is proposed to have the lighting done by electricity.

There are four brothers, named John, Marcellus, Charles and Albert S., of ward four, who have always been depended on to vote the democratic ticket, but who refused to go to the polls at the municipal election on Tuesday, the 7th inst., lest it might be thought that their voting even for municipal officers might be accounted for in support of the Cleveland administration. One of the brothers came home from the army on purpose to vote for Gen. McClellan for president.

J. A. Farrington, superintendent of the Portsmouth Machine Co., is in New York city. The company have recently increased the product of their brass department, some of which is being sold in New York. The managers have found it advantageous to sell direct to the trade, instead of through a Boston house, as was the plan when they first began to make brass goods on a large scale.

The Eastern Star of Kennebunk says: "Vaughn's island in Cape Porpoise harbor, opposite the Cape light, one of the prettiest places along the coast, and where we have passed our fall vacation for several years, has been sold by Seth Warren to several gentlemen from different states. We understand the price paid was $3000."

The annual field meeting of the New Hampshire state board of agriculture will be held at Boar's Head, Hampton beach, Aug. 28th. Dr. Peter Collier of the New York experiment station will be among the speakers.

Montreal Shipping Declining.

The statement of customs receipts at the port of Montreal for July, and the statement of ocean going vessels arriving at the port since the opening of navigation, made public Aug. 7th, show a great decrease in the shipping interests of Montreal. The gross customs receipts of the port for the past month were $91,385, as compared with $123,761 for the same month last year, or a falling off of $32,376. The number of vessels arriving from the opening of navigation to the 31st of July was 220 with a total tonnage of 390,888, as compared with 416 vessels with a total tonnage of 491,480 last year, or a decrease of 141 vessels and 100,592 tons.

Don't Wait

Until your hair becomes dry, thin, and gray before giving the attention needed to preserve its beauty and vitality. Keep on your toilet-table a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor—the only dressing you require for the hair—and use a little, daily, to preserve the natural color and prevent baldness.

Thomas Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky., writes: "Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. Tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best hair-restorer in the world."

"My hair was faded and dry," writes Mabel C. Hardy, of Delavan, Ill.; "but after using a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it became black and glossy."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, is convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

OH, WHAT A COLD!

THIS is the season for sudden changes in the weather, and a great many "take cold" either in their Head or on their Lungs, causing Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. These troubles can be soon relieved and cured by taking Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific, which acts directly on the Throat and Lungs, entirely removing these difficulties.

Cured his boy of Croup.

C. M. BROOKS, Lowell, Mass., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific as a cure for Coughs, Colds, and Croup. I used it in my family last winter with the best results. Two or three doses cured my little boy of Croup, for which I am very thankful."

You can cure that Cough in a short time. You can cure your Catarrh if you persist in its use, as it will stop the secretion of Catarrhal matter in the head; it will relieve Croup in from three to five minutes.

The best he ever saw.

"The best medicine for Coughs and Consumptive Complaints that ever I saw is Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific," so says JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of Boston.

Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific is sold by all Druggists. Price 50 cents and $1. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

Mormon Colony in Chihuahua.

The Mormons have within the past three years seen the advantages of cheap grazing and farming lands in this country and the opportunity to escape persecution in the United States. The results are seen in the flourishing colonies of Juarez and Diaz, the former adjoining us, the latter about seventy-five miles to the north.

Each colony comprises from 200 to 300 souls. They are recognized for their fair dealing, honesty and thriftiness. The country owes them a debt of gratitude for introducing high grade live stock of all descriptions, farming implements, seeds, trees, saw and flour mills and industries hitherto unknown to the Mexican but in its most primitive form. Though polygamy is against the law in this country, the Mormons are tolerated and encouraged, and up to the present time have been of immense benefit to the country in educating the natives to a more advanced class of work. Some proselyting has been done by their missionaries in the southern part of the republic, mostly in and about the City of Mexico.

They attempted to induce a number of the converts to form part of the Juarez colony, but after bringing about thirty families they were obliged to return them to their homes. The Mexican converts could not amalgamate with the Americans. The Mexican, though converted in belief, could not be converted to the manners and customs of the American. Besides, they are a great people for forming attachments to the land of their birth. They rarely leave the home they were born in. This is decidedly so among the lower, half Indian class that comprised the majority of the converts. To this fact the Latter Day Saints, as they prefer to be called, attribute their failure. The colony of Juarez is laid out in rectangular form, divided into streets and lots. In the latter their little wooden houses are erected, the only wooden houses in this portion of the country, surrounded by gardens and trees. In case of "plural wives," two or more houses are seen in the same lot. —Louis Ross in New York World.

Value of the Eucalyptus Tree.

The eucalyptus belongs to the myrtle tribe. It is said that there are as many as 150 varieties of the tree. They are native to Australia, but have already been introduced into most of the tropical and temperate countries of the world. Two kinds have been chiefly cultivated, the red gum (resinifera), and the blue gum (globulus), which is the better known. It is famous for its rapid growth, as it often makes an increase in height of from six to nine feet a year. The tree continues growing at this rate until it has reached an enormous size.

The products of this tree are numerous and varied. The wood is said to be valuable for the carpenter's and builder's uses. The gum, or rosin, is employed in the manufacture of soaps, perfumes, lozenges, court plaster, liniments, syrups, pomades, toilet vinegars, as well as many preparations used for artistic purposes, such as varnishing oils, veneer and tracing paper." There has been for some years established in Paris a store for the sale of eucalyptus perfumery.

But by far the most valuable and important property of this tree is its power of correcting malaria. This quality is, perhaps, due to the aromatic oil which the tree contains, or more probably to the drainage effected by its roots. It has been proved in many countries in which the tree has been planted. In Algeria the cultivation of the tree has rendered many low lying or marshy districts inhabitable, where, in the early years of French occupation, foreigners could not live on account of deadly fevers.—Youth's Companion.

The World's Highest Mountains.

Every once in a while we discover that some mountain peak must give up the undeserved distinction conferred upon it of holding its head higher than all other summits. For a long time Mount Chimborazo was supposed to be the highest mountain in the world until in the progress of the Himalayan surveys Mount Everest was found to overtop it. Four years ago W. W. Graham, who has been higher above the sea than any other mountain climber, asserted that Everest must yield the palm of supremacy to an unnamed peak about seventy miles from it. We long supposed that Mount St. Elias was the loftiest mountain of North America, but we now know that that honor belongs to Mount Wrangel, which is about 500 feet higher than St. Elias. It was also supposed that Mount Kilima-Njaro, 18,700 feet high, was the greatest elevation in Africa, but now comes Count Teleki, the Hungarian traveler, with the assertion that this mountain must play second fiddle to Mount Kenia, about 200 miles north. He is the only man who has yet ascended Kenia.—New York Sun.

The Poison of Tobacco.

It is very unusual to find in a great smoker a healthy appetite for plain food, and medical opinions may be had in any number as to dyspepsia caused by smoking. To whatever degree the habit affects the nervous organization, it appears to be certain that the process which is regarded as soothing is really destructive. Sir Benjamin Brodie must have known what he was writing about when he declared that "the poison of tobacco acts by destroying the function of the brain." In a Russian hospital in 1866 a Dr. Chadnowski took the liberty of examining by means of a pump the digestive powers of six smoking and as many non-smoking soldiers, and he recorded that "in the former the time required for digestion averaged seven hours, while in the case of the non-smokers the mean period of digestion was only six hours." With the present enormous consumption of tobacco the social consequences, apart from those concerning the bodily and mental powers of the consumers, are important.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Crystals of Blood.

According to Dr. Pesetty Cevera, writing in a Spanish journal, if blood be mixed with a little bile, small crystals are formed which are of different shapes in different species of animals. In man they are right angled prisms, in the horse cubes, in pigs rhomboids, in sheep rhomboidal plates, in dogs right angled prisms very similar to those seen in human blood, and in chickens more or less regular cubes.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The One Who Had to Wait.

Miss [illegible], the child pianist, wrote a note to the young boy violinist, Nettie Carpenter, and told her that he had changed his mind about marrying since seeing her. She graciously replied:

"Very well, I will wait for you." To which the small adorer responded pathetically:

"Oh, but it's I who'll have to wait. You are all ready."—Boston Advertiser.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachael's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor!" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

The Supply of Peanuts.

The supply of peanuts comes almost wholly from Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina. Virginia is the banner peanut growing state, averaging 2,000,000 bushels yearly. Tennessee comes next with an average of 500,000 bushels, and North Carolina's production averages 150,000 bushels. The estimated supply for 1888 is 3,300,000 bushels, which includes the nearly 600,000 bushels of last year's crop which still remain in the market.—New York Mail and Express.

New Use for Ice.

"I'm going to Maine after a consignment of ice for consumption in Washington," said an avenue dealer to a new reporter nosing around for an item.

"Indeed!" exclaimed the reporter, pulling his notebook, "that's something new. I didn't know before that ice was a remedy for consumption."

The city editor saved the reputation of the paper.—Washington Critic.

In the Amusing Comedietta Of "Used Up."

Sir Charles Coldstream, a blase man of fashion, is made to deprecate everything in which everybody else is supposed to take an interest, with the languid remark that "there is really nothing in it." He even extended the criticism to the crater of Vesuvius, down which he looked but saw "nothing in it." Such characters are scarcer on this side of the Atlantic than abroad, but they exist here notwithstanding. Such men need a "fillip to nature" to medicinally stimulate their jaded appetite, overcome their lassitude, and renew the zest of existence. They and others upon whom the world's enjoyments are beginning prematurely to pall, will find in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a welcome and speedy renewal of vigor and health. Appetite returns, dyspeptic and bilious symptoms disappear, the nerves grow strong, and the hour of retirement is unfraught with apprehension of uneasy repose when this superlative tonic is employed. It remedies fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Dandruff eradicated, the scalp made clean, and gray hair restored to its original youthful beauty and vigor by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Bristol, R. I., has an epidemic of typhus and typhoid diseases, several cases of scarlet fever, and thirty of malarial disorder.

Seymour Thatcher, M. D., of Hermon, N. Y., says Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry cures a cough by loosening and clearing the lungs and allaying irritation, thus removing the cause instead of drying up the cough and leaving the cause behind.

Mrs. Erbe, an Ohio bride of six weeks, wants a divorce because her husband has failed to do all that he promised to do, all that he promised during his courting. If that is going to be an adequate cause for a decree of divorce, there isn't a marriage in the world that will hold for a month.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, derangement of the digestive organs, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system. Now is the time to take it. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

NAMES FOR STATES.

The True Test of the Name of a Country. Verbal Awkwardness.

Probably the worst name for a country known to history is the United States of America. It is ambiguous, may mean either a nation or a confederacy, and has two senses in the constitution. It is not so trivial as New Found Land, but it is longer and does not admit of shortening, as does the name of our neighbor island to Newfoundland. New South Wales is almost as bad, and all three are awkward beyond redemption. The test of the name of a country is in whether it admits of a derivative gentile noun and adjective. Europe gives us European; Britain, British; Cyprus, Cypriote, and Siam, Siamese. These are good as names. But no man can bring himself to say that he is a New South Welshman, or that he is a United States of American.

And so, after the fashion in which the neighbors of Praise God Barebone's brother with the wonderful name, "If Christ had not died thou hadst been damned," said it for short, we are in the habit of calling ourselves simply by the tail end of our proper designation, Americans, forgetful that every human being from Yukon to Patagonia has equal rights with us to the name. The people of New South Wales want to change their name, and The Spectator well says they ought to do it, although for them to claim the name of Australia would never do. They might call their country Sydney, or Sydneyland, or Cooksylvania, or Southland, or Auralia, it makes little difference what so long as it is manageable. What not to call themselves might be learned from the names of some of our United States of American states. Some of our states allow no derivative. A man from Virginia is a Virginian, from South Carolina a South Carolinian, but how does a man from Massachusetts pronounce his name? Only Yankee, which is no less absurd than for Enroughty to spell Darby. What is a man from Connecticut? Still a Yankee. What is a man from New Hampshire? Still a Yankee, although Senator Cass tried to better the term when he called John P. Hale a New Hampshire goose, and Hale retorted by calling Cass a Michigander. Men from Maine can still be only Yankees or Down Easters, for they resent, we believe, being called Mainiacs.

The later names adopted by our states are generally musical and usable, although Ohioan is a disagreeable derivative of Ohio. The gentile word ought to be Ohiote, like Cypriote, but, perhaps, the people of that great state do not care to rhyme with coyote. Wisconsin refuses as strenuously as Michigan to accept a derivative, as the only one possible would be Wisconsinner. Of the present territories Idaho has a very sweet name, but what could its citizens call themselves? We suppose the people of Utah might be Utes, but if the territory were to take the proposed state name it would be hard to call them Deseretters. What we chiefly seek in a name is that it be easy to pronounce and be flexible. Its meaning is of little consequence. China is a good name, but it means nothing, and the people of China have no knowledge of it.—New York Independent.

Vice and Virtue in the City.

It is said that New York is the wickedest city in the country. It is the largest and vice thrives in crowded communities. Yet if it is the wickedest city it is also the best on the continent. If it contains thousands of the worst men and women in our land, it contains also thousands of the brightest and best of Christians. In point of morality it will compare favorably with any city in the world. It is unhappily true that the devil's work is done there upon a large scale; but so is the work of God upon an even greater scale. If the city contains the gaudiest, the most alluring and the vilest haunts of sin, it also boasts the noblest and grandest institutions of religion, of charity and virtue. Being the great center of wealth and culture, New York is also the center of everything that is good and beautiful in life.—Joe Howard in St. Louis Republican.

Foreign Schools in Turkey.

The Turkish government appears to be reviving its school laws with the aim of suppressing American and other foreign schools. The new law provides that no foreigner can open a school without a special firman given by the sultan himself; and such documents he is slow to give. The law forbids any Ottoman subject from attending such a school until he shall have taken a course of religious instructions. The schools now existing are to be suppressed unless they conform to these regulations within six months. As a large amount of capital is invested in educational institutions in Turkey, the American minister has protested against this law, and urges other embassies to join him.—Frank Leslie's.

Names for New States.

There is a good deal in names, in spite of what somebody has said. The house committee on territories know it, and they wisely insist that if the northern half of Dakota comes into the Union it shall be not as "North Dakota," but as "Pembina"; and that if "Washington" organizes it must drop its already much appropriated name and take "Tacoma," "Yakima," or "Walluia," well known aboriginal designations. There is no reason why new states should bear names worn threadbare, or why one should be called "North" or "West" something or other. It argues a poverty of language. All new states ought to be compelled to bear melodious Indian names, as most of the old ones do.—Frank Leslie's.

The Aqueducts of Peru.

Among the great water works of the world those of Peru were in some respects the most difficult achievements of any. The Incas built aqueducts from the slopes of the Andes for a distance of over 100 miles to the capital, carrying the water partly through tunnels cut in the rocks and partly on arcades on supporting pillars of mason work to span valleys, the channels being composed of cut stone without cement. From these great aqueducts a number of branch conduits and furrows were laid laterally for irrigation purposes.—Scientific Journal.

The art of starching linen was introduced into England by a Mrs. Dinghein, a Flemish woman, in 1563.

Utilizing Waste Leather.

A most interesting feature of all businesses using leather is that not one particle of the leather is wasted. Our shoe factories alone sell annually fifty tons of waste. This goes mainly to a firm in Philadelphia, who pays $7 a ton for it. A large amount is sent to Lynn, Mass., and other points, where the leather is ground up, mixed with a medium and pressed into buttons. The remainder that is not so used is treated chemically, turned into a gelatinous mass, dried and ground into a fertilizing dust. The sole leather pieces that fall from the block of the heel stamper are sorted into two heaps. The very fine pieces are put with the fine waste. The scraps, presenting a surface of a couple of square inches, are barreled up and sold to parties in New York or Boston at one cent a pound, where they are put through a peculiar machine. This instrument splits the pieces nearly through. Then it opens the piece thus cut like a book. Thence it is delivered from between rollers, and is large enough to be again sent to the factory to be cut up into heel lifts.—Baltimore Sun.

An Elephant's Brain.

Cornell college desired an elephant's brain, and it fortunately secured one. P. T. Barnum was the donor and the recent fire at Bridgeport, Conn., the cause of his generosity. They hardened the brain while it remained in the skull by continual injection, the same method employed with the brain of the Elmira murderer. The method originated with this college and prevents the distortion following the removal and subsequent hardening of the brain. It is done in the following manner: All the vessels except the vertebral and the carotid arteries are tied, and these are connected by rubber tubes with a tank containing diluted alcohol, which is arranged at a proper height to allow the fluid to slowly flow through the brain substance. The study of the brain is yet to be made, and the result is awaited with interest. Animal trainers, especially those of elephants, claim that they possess little reasoning power, and we do not imagine in consequence that the result will benefit anything but comparative anatomy.—The Doctor.

Petrified Monster in Iowa.

The petrified remains of a huge animal have been discovered near Percy, Ia., by a man named S. R. Dawson. It was lying beneath the surface on the bank of the Des Moines river. The total length of the body measures, without the head, over forty feet. The head was detached from the body, and when discovered was some distance away from it. At nine feet from the end of the tail it measured four feet six inches in width. In support of his theory that this is the petrified remains of some extinct monster, Mr. Dawson, in describing the find, shows that it is entirely unlike the stone formation in the vicinity. A spar of quartzite formation was discovered in the locality where the blood vessels and intestinal canal should be, and another formation was found in other parts. The remains were in a bed of dark blue stone surrounded by petrified remains of insects and other animals. Mr. Dawson is confident that the monster belonged to the carboniferous age.—Demorest's Monthly.

Human Curiosity in Austria.

A remarkable case of disease is at present engrossing the attention of medical men in Austria. There is lying at the hospital of the city of Ischl a patient afflicted with a bony excrescence protruding from between the lower cervical vertebrae. The excrescence has the form of a horn, is round and straight, with a diameter of one and a half inches. It has grown to a length of about eight inches, and would probably have been much longer by this time but for the fact that the point was broken off several times to be sent to the pathologic institute of Vienna for examination. There is no feeling in the horn, the breaking off of the points, which the patient did himself, causing him no pain whatever. At the root where the horn is attached to the spinal column it is soft and movable, but it rapidly grows hard and is like bone at a short distance from the root.—Foreign Letter.

Writing a Composite Novel.

A new amusement is suggested by a club of young persons—sixteen in number. They are writing a book—a novel. So far the secretary is having the most fun out of it, but great expectations tremble way down in all the sixteen hearts. This novel is to have sixteen chapters, and each chapter is to be written by a different member. When finished the successive chapters are handed back to the secretary, who, consequently, is the only one who knows the various writers. They are all in fear and trembling lest the love making fall to their lot—that being considered the most difficult part to do justice to. There will certainly be much amusement afforded by the undertaking.—Chicago Herald.

Historian Bancroft's Longevity.

Mr. George Bancroft accounted for his own longevity the other day with three reasons: First, that he was the middle child in his father's family, equally distant from the youngest and the oldest; second, that he had always gone to bed at 10 o'clock, unless it had been impossible; and, third, that he had always spent four hours in each day in the open air, unless prevented by a storm. He added that his riding, of which the newspapers had made so much, was primarily for the purpose of being out of doors, and not of being on horseback.—Frank Leslie's.

Big Armor Clad Ships.

The French government has again taken up the building of great armor clad ships. Eight are now being pressed forward to completion. Admiral Pallu de la Barriere has caused a vessel to be built encased with cocoanut fibre instead of armor plates. It is said to have greater power of resistance than steel.—Paris Letter.

King Theebaw's Chair.

Among the loot taken from King Theebaw's palace in Burmah and about to be sent to London is a carved ivory chair, which, as it took two years to make, was not completed when the king was captured. It was composed of twenty-five elephant tusks and worth many thousands of rupees.—Chicago Herald.

Defenders of American Industry.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

The Dead Hero.

The train bearing the body of Gen. Sheridan left New Bedford shortly after six o'clock P. M., on the 8th, and arrived at Washington at 3:15 P. M., on the 9th. The train was wholly manned by ex-soldiers who formerly served under Sheridan. The body was taken to St. Matthew's church, when a detail of the Loyal Legion mounted guard over the remains. Both houses of Congress voted to adjourn Saturday, to attend the funeral.

Mr. Curtis Guild, in his third book of European travels, entitled "Britons and Mucovites," pays his respects to Mr. Edward Morey, who was able to crowd so many ridiculous prevarications in his work the "Truth about America." Mr. Guild departs from the usual path of the literary traveller, and when he sees, as have very many of his countrymen, defects in hotel, railway or similar economy in England, makes note of the same and tells the "Truth About England." We have read this part of his book with much satisfaction, while we have borrowed his eyes to enjoy the art treasures in Russia and learn much of Muscovy of which we admit a prior ignorance. If Mr. Guild did not live in Boston we should indulge in the expressive but improper phrase "Thanks awfully!"

There is likely to be a deadlock in the senate over the fishery surrender business, the republicans refusing to consider other business until the treaty is disposed of, and the democrats refusing to allow its acceptance or rejection to come to a vote.

Congress have repeatedly, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.—George Washington.

President Cleveland declines cautiously to dub himself a free trader, but he caters up a free trade position without disguise. —London Saturday Review.

The great interests of an agricultual, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

Mr. Cleveland demands in effect that there shall be a tariff for revenue purposes only. No tinkering with the tariff will suffice; no readjustment of duties will do. The only reform that common sense can accept of is one which unaffectedly substitutes the principle of unimpeded imports for that of tariff regulations.—London Standard.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

It may be admitted that large reductions in the duties on imported manufactured goods would produce great distress in many parts of the United States. The free importation of iron, coal and wool would be a great boom to British producers. * * * If it were accompanied with reductions in the tariff upon cotton, woolen and other manufactures the artisans of this country would derive a marked benefit from it.—The Scotsman.

Lotteries and Dreams.

In lotteries and kindred forms of gambling, men reject trust in other folks' luck, and believe instead in coincidences and dreams. They find the number on which they finally stake their fate in all manner of absurd and unmeaning ways. All the tens of thousands of ticket holders in a great lottery have selected their number in some way satisfactory to themselves, about which we hear nothing when the result is a failure, as in ninety-nine cases out of hundred it necessarily is. But when the result chances to be a success, as in a small proportion of cases it must be, the whole story is gravely related in the papers as though the number actually bringing the prize had been determined beforehand by some scientific process of reasoning, and success assured by the exercise of good judgment and ingenuity.

Yet it is idle to inveigh against the folly of such fancies and superstitions. They have existed in all ages and among all races from time immemorial. Carrying in themselves their own contradiction, they also carry in themselves what to believers in luck appears their full confirmation. For he does not observe that the ideas about luck which run through his mind are contradictory, and in their self contradiction provide for every event. When success comes to him by following one idea about luck his faith in luck is confirmed; but when failure arrives he is not a whit less satisfied that he holds the true faith about luck, for he has another doctrine about that event also.—Richard A. Proctor.

Alcohol for Diphtheria.

Alcohol, we make bold to say, is the prince of antiseptics and the most perfect and reliable medicine of which we have any knowledge in diphtheria. Diluted with equal parts of water and given in small and repeated doses, the malignant symptoms of this most fatal malady soon disappear, and convalescence becomes assured. It is interesting to note with what facility the alcohol disolves the diphtheric exudation in the throat, lowers the temperature and calms the pulse, showing its destructive action upon the germs of the disease, which have been absorbed by the glands and gained access to the blood. This remedy has been used by us in the treatment of diphtheria since 1873, during which time no case of the disease has slipped through our hands except in one solitary instance, and that case was in articulo mortis before the remedy was given. The remedy is also prophylactic to the disease, as we have found in many instances where it has been expedient to quarantine the patient. For this purpose it is only necessary for exposed persons to use the remedy, diluted as above stated, as a gargle and to swallow a little of it three or four times a day.—Medical Times.

How Wooden Spools Are Made.

Birch wood is preferred. The birch is first sawed into sticks four or five feet long and seven-eighths of an inch to three inches square, according to the size of the spool to be produced. These sticks are thoroughly seasoned. They are sawed into short blocks, and the blocks are dried in a hot air kiln. At the time they are sawed a hole is bored through them. One whirl of the little block against sharp knives, shaped by a pattern, makes the spools at the rate of one a second. A small boy feeds the spool machine, simply placing the blocks in a spout, and throwing out the knotty or defective stock. The machine is automatic, but cannot do the sorting. The spools are revolved rapidly in drums and polish themselves. For some purposes they are dyed yellow, red or black. They are made in hundreds of shapes and sizes. When one sees on a spool of thread "100 yards" or "200 yards," these words do not signify that the thread has been measured, but that the spool has been gauged and is supposed to contain so much thread.—Golden Days.

A Valuable Literary Discovery.

A literary event of national importance has taken place in Japan. One of the legation officers, now with the new minister to Germany, recently discovered in the Ashikaga college (Tsuh-li Hioh) a copy of Hwang K'an's Confucian Analects over 1,200 years old, with all the ancient commentator's notes. This work has disappeared in China ever since the Southern Sung dynasty—i. e., for some 700 or 800 years; and as the whole history of the present copy is known, the Chinese government has directed the minister in Japan to borrow it, in order that a carefully corrected copy may be taken. It may be added that should there be any Kana inscriptions upon this copy valuable light will also be thrown upon the Japanese alphabet question.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Oyster Culture in France.

Oyster culture has had a great development in France. Thus, while in 1857 there were in the Bay of Arcachon twenty parks, or district oyster beds, in 1865 there were 297 beds, producing 10,000,000 oysters annually, and there are now 15,000 acres of beds, yielding an annual supply of 300,000,000 oysters. From Auray, on the coast of Brittany, 7,000,000 oysters were sent to market in 1876-77; in 1885 the numbers exceeded 70,000,000. On the other hand, the British oyster industry has declined, and the coast which furnished ancient Rome with oysters, and within a generation exported them to Paris, now ranks low in the list of oyster nurseries.—Public Opinion.

An African Mocking Bird.

A Kaffir vanished and groans were heard. He was searched for without result, but on the following night groans were still heard. The search continued and the man was found murdered. His murderer was arrested and executed, but the groans still continued, to the dismay of their auditors. At last they were traced to a mocking bird. That bird alone of living things had seen the deed of blood, and now from day to day reproduced the piteous moaning of its victim.—Saturday Review.

Something to Brag About.

Chicago newspapers are bragging considerably because, as they say, New York has dropped to the sixth place, judged by her miles of railroads, and because Illinois stands first, Iowa, Kansas, Texas, Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio follow in order.—New York Sun.

The North Magnetic Pole.

Future explorations will be purely expeditions of scientific research. One of the first and most important things to be done is the determining of the north magnetic pole. This is not identical with the pole proper, but is the point where the ordinary needle refuses to act and the dip needle stands perpendicular. This pole has been approximately located twice—in 1831 by Ross, and in 1879 by me. Ross located it in Boothia, on Cape Adelaide, and was made Sir John for doing so. I found it roughly about twenty miles northwest of Cape Felix. In this age of electricity the locating of this pole is a matter of intense interest to the scientific world.—Lieut. Schwatka.

Dr. Gage and Associate Physicians, and Their Great Work.

Probably no physician in New England is better and more favorably known, says a New Hampshire exchange, than is Dr. Gage, the gifted specialist, who has treated more than fifteen thousand patients in this state, the announcement of his visits each month being the signal for a grand rally of a multitude of invalids. His success is indeed phenomenal and the reports of marvellous cures would fill this entire paper, the like of which was never known in the history of medical practice. The following is a fair sample:

Mr. Editor: A few months ago my daughter was laying at the point of death. She had a complication of troubles, a terrible cough, raising an immense quantity, a discharging sore upon her hip which rendered her perfectly helpless. Our family physician gave us no hope, but with a mother's will and determination to save her perishing child if possible, I hastened to consult Dr. Gage. Although he did not see her he nevertheless understood the case and his remedies have wrought a miracle—almost—by restoring my child to perfect health. I thank God that I consulted Dr. Gage.

Worse Than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terrible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas of this belt country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately the latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No matter if you have used this remedy before, it will pay you to get a bottle and read the directions, or send for the pamphlet just to learn how to use it economically.

Since the Boston & Maine conductors began the custom of tearing off five mileage coupons between Old Orchard and Biddeford and only four between Saco and Old Orchard, it is surprising to notice how large a number of people claim a residence in Saco. "You can't find a man on the train between the beach and here who will admit that he lives in Biddeford," remarked a conductor on the noon train to-day, "but I notice that about seven out of every ten men who claim to be going to Saco ride through to Biddeford:" How a man will scheme to save two cents.—Biddeford Times.

It is not alone the proprietors of seashore and mountain resorts between Cape May and Eastport who this season have cause to complain of the weather. A European despatch says: "The weather in the Alps has been so bad this season that the hotel keepers look in vain with dismal faces for the usual stream of foreign guests. A continuous rain has been a calamity to the region." Beside this, it is asserted that the American tourists in Europe this year do not aspire to secure distinction by paying more than anybody else, and the harvest from this source is much diminished.

PEARLINE has no equal for all purposes for which soap is used. It is the greatest known economizer of time, drudgery, and wear and tear in washing and cleaning.

MILLIONS of packages of Pearline are consumed annually, by economical, intelligent housekeepers—women who are quick to embrace modern labor-saving ideas; or, not doing the work themselves, are bright enough to supply their servants with Pearline. They get the best possible results, and have fewer backaches and complaints. Their clothes and paint wear longer because they are not rubbed to pieces.

Beware of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them.

Pearline sells on its merits, and is never peddled.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

The City Councils of 1887—88 held their last meeting on Thursday evening, the 9th inst.

The aldermen were all present with the exception of Ald. Stevens, and Mayor Hodgdon occupied the chair. In the council, President Page presided.

The boards met in convention to canvass the vote for mayor, and it appearing that Geo. E. Hodgdon had a majority of all the votes cast, he was declared elected for the ensuing municipal year.

The convention then rose, and the council, after passing a vote of thanks to President Walter H. Page for the courtesy and fairness with which he has presided, adjourned without day.

In board of aldermen, a communication from Benjamin Russell relative to a dead tree on State street was referred to the committee on streets, with power.

A communication from Dr. Fred E. Potter in regard to the height from the sidewalks of awnings in various parts of the city; petition of estate of Wm. P. Jones and others for a drain on Rogers street; request of Abel Jackson for leave to enter sewer on Union street; and request for relaying of plank sidewalk on Miller avenue, were referred to the next board.

Committee on accounts reported bills to the amount of $3000, which were ordered to be paid.

A resolution expressive of the board's appreciation of the courteous dignity with which Mayor Hodgdon has presided over their deliberations during the year just closed, and thanking City Clerk Goodrich and City Messenger Gardner for the faithful and efficient manner in which they have performed their duties, was unanimously passed, and appropriately responded to by the gentlemen named; after which the board adjourned sine die.

THE HEAVY TAX-PAYERS.

The following-named individuals and corporations are this year assessed to pay a tax of $500 or upward to the city:

Frank Jones	$3,701.80
First National Bank	2,021.95
Charles H. Mendum	1,744.73

Alfred Elwyn	506.22
True M. Ball	504.60

In 1886 there were 106 persons who each paid taxes amounting to $100 or more, and sixteen who paid $500 or over. The rate that year was $1.70 on $100, and the total assessment of the city $104,773.86.

In 1887 there were 214 who paid $100 or more, and twenty-three who paid $500 or more, the rate being $1.75 on $100, and the total assessment $111,806 68.

This year there are 212 who pay over $100 each, and twenty-four who pay over $500, the rate being $1 74 on $100, and the total assessment $116,069 77.

In 1886 the number of ratable polls returned was 1937; in 1887 the number was 2122, a gain of 185; and this year the number is 2490, a gain of 368 from last year, and 553 from 1886. As the most moderate estimates give the total number of persons to be at least four times the number of ratable polls, this increase indicates an addition of from 2000 to 2500 to the city's population within the last two years.

BASE BALL.

There is a discussion going on among the adherents and members of the late lamented Interstate league, as to whether the Portsmouth or Dover club should have the pennant. We do not pretend to be a base ball expert, but as club after club dropped out of the Interstate league, Portsmouth being the last to do so, leaving Dover alone in its glory, it is hard to see what claim any other club than the Dovers can have to the pennant. Dover having not resigned from the league, still remains in it, and is all there is left of it; if there are any assets in the way of pennants, etc., Dover must be the sole custodian of the same.

The Bridge Streeters and South Enders played a very warmly contested game on the South street grounds Thursday afternoon, the latter winning by a score of ten to six, in thirteen innings. The youngsters had as much "chin wag" and "kicking" as though they belonged to the National league.

The Lowells on the south-end grounds this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock,

POLICE COURT.

On Thursday, Aug. 9th, Frank Russell was fined $3, costs $6.90, for drunkenness. Brentwood in default of payment.

THE PORTSMOUTH.

Orders have been issued to make repairs on the sloop-of-war Portsmouth, now at this navy yard. The estimated cost of the repairs is $42,000. The Portsmouth was built at this yard in 1843, and was a long time in fitting out; she sailed in December, 1844, on her first cruise. She is of fine model, considering the date of her construction, and is an excellent sailer.

The chief of the bureau of equipment and recruiting has been desirous of having placed at his disposal a composite vessel, that navigation by steam as well as by sails could be taught the boys in training. Older heads than the head of the bureau thought that a ship in hand was better than one in a congressional committee, and have advised that the present training ships be utilized until some steam vessel shall be turned over to the bureau for this special duty.

The objects of the advocates of free trade is not to reduce the surplus by economical expenditures, but to retain it in the treasury to be cited as an argument for a reduction of duties. This has been the policy of the free traders. They have allowed the democratic administration to be free in all matters save in the expenditure of money for the defence of the country on land and at sea. They prated about economy, and have allowed thousands of dollars to be wasted in a controversy incited by private individuals about a patent, to the end that a ring of democrats might be enriched if the machinery of the government could be strong enough to overturn the judgment of the courts. But when it comes to building up the navy, restoring or renewing our coast defences, keeping the dockyarks in decent repair, or appropriating sufficient sums for the ordinary annual expenditures of the government, the democracy, under orders from its patron element, free trade, has with one voice exclaimed—

"We can't afford it. This is a reform administration."

Fortunately, the presidential election is at hand. The unmistakable signs of the defeat predicted by Mr. Cleveland himself when he told the secretary of the treasury that his tariff message would be the cause of his not being re-elected, incites the party to the perception of the need of activity on the navy yards. From now on, until after November, long-required repairs will be judiciously made on our national ships. The Pensacola has gone to Norfolk to fight the battles of the democracy in Virginia, and two sloops-of-war will engage in our harbor, one for Maine and the other for New Hampshire. We are more and more convinced that this is a great country, and its present administration a reform one of the most astonishing caliber.

GOT BACK AGAIN.

Mr. J. C. Carr, who was so hastily and unceremoniously ejected from his store on Market street by fire some months ago, has got back to his old stand, which has been refitted in such manner as to be more convenient than ever, and where he has a full line of footwear from the best manufacturers, of the latest styles and best quality, which he sells at the lowest prices for which such goods can be sold. Look in at the rejuvenated store and see for yourself.

MY LIFE IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. Jacob Stroyer of Salem, Mass., who in early life was a slave in South Carolina, and is now a student in Oberlin college, fitting himself to be a preacher and teacher among eth freedmen of the south, is in this city, selling a little book written by himself, entitled "My Life in the South." Mr. Stroyer and his book are both commended by prominent citizens of Salem, including several clergymen, and from a glance at the pages of the book we can say that is it of much interest as a simple, graphic description of incidents and experiences of a phase of life now happily passed away forever in this land, by one who wore the yoke and felt its galls. It is written in no bitterness of spirit, and closes by saying "I make no complaint against those who held me in slavery. My war is upon ignorance, which has been and is the curse of my race." The price of the book is but twenty-five cents, and those who purchase it will get the full worth of their money, and at the same time aid one who aims to aid his people, to complete his education to that end, as Mr. Stroyer depends mainly on selling his book during vacation, for means to defray his expenses at college.

Fred S. Leighton of Charlestown, Mass., is visiting his mother, Mrs. W. Irving Leighton, of Austin street.

Rev. Thomas W. Brown of Bridgewater, Mass., is visiting his sister, Mrs. Edward Weeks, of High street.

Miss Bertha N. Fletcher, daughter of Mr. Jos. B. Fletcher, U. S. N., of this city, is stopping at Beach Hill farm, Meredith Village, this state.

Miss Hattie B. Folsom of Manchester is visiting Mr. John O. Ayers and wife, of Pleasant street.

Mr. George F. Evans of Lonisville, Ky., arrived in this city on the 8th inst., on a visit to his relatives and friends here.

MARITIME NOTES.

The brickers J. Chester Wood, Hattie Lewis, Lillie and Wilson & Willard arrived from Boston on the 8th inst., light, and the D. K. Ham, G. W. Raitt and Sadie A. Kimball sailed for Boston on the 9th with cargoes.

The barge Scotia, with 1650 tons of coal to J. Albert Walker, arrived off this harbor at eight o'clock Wednesday evening, the 8th inst., in tow of the tug B. W. Morse, which having in tow another barge bound east, dropped the Scotia outside, and she was towed in by the Clara Batemen, which was on the lookout for her.

Mr. Wilbur J. Rockwood on Thursday tendered to the Board of Instruction his resignation as principal of the Jones school.

Asst. Marshal Hurley has returned from his annual vacation, and resumed his duties as one of the city's guardians.

A boy about fourteen years old, attached to the training ship Portsmouth, on Thursday forenoon fell from the ship's foretop, struck first on the rail and then on a spar lashed outside, and fell into the water between the ship and the wharf. He was taken to the navy yard hospital, where it was found that no bones were broken, his only apparent injuries being some slight bruises and scratches. The surgeons thought he would soon come out all right.

It is announced that the new manager of the Western Union telegraph office in this city will hereafter have the office kept open until nine o'clock in the evening, instead of closing it at eight, as has been the rule for several years past. The business public will appreciate this change.

The York County Wheelmen have been invited by the Portland Wheel Club to join in an excursion to Buffalo, N. Y., in September, on the occasion of the international fair and the great bicycle races. The fare for the round trip will be $10.65. The party will start from Boston on Sept. 2nd, returning the following week.

It is expected that George D. Emerson, M. D., of Auburn, Me., will locate in Sanford for the practice of medicine. Mr. Emerson has a brother-in-law, Dr. B. F. Morrill, at North Berwick. The opening in Sanford is said to be one of the best in Maine, as it is a growing enterprising town of 3,000 people, and has but one physician. Dr. Emerson was but recently graduated from the Burlington, Vt., medical college.

The Biddeford Journal says: "The speed with which the Bar Harbor train passes through these cities is terrific, especially when the train happens to be behind time. The passage across the Main street crossing in Saco and over the bridges is particularly frightful. The iron bridges snap and tremble beneath the shock of the flying train, and the cars slap and jump until the flanges upon the wheels seem to almost leave the rail. If by chance one of the cars should jump the track while upon any of the bridges it is hardly probable that any of the passengers or train employes would live to tell the story. With as many teams and as much travel as there is upon Main street, Saco, with nothing to keep people off the track but the frail wooden gates, no train should be allowed to run at such frightful speed."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinence and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and warns of malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

OH, WHAT A COLD!

THIS is the season for sudden changes in the weather, and a great many "take cold" either in their Head or on their Lungs, causing Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. These troubles can be soon relieved and cured by taking Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific, which acts directly on the Throat and Lungs, entirely removing these difficulties.

Cured his boy of Croup.

C. M. BROOKS, Lowell, Mass., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific as a cure for Coughs, Colds, and Croup. I used it in my family last winter with the best results. Two or three doses cured my little boy of Croup, for which I am very thankful."

You can cure that Cough in a short time. You can cure your Catarrh if you persist in its use, as it will stop the secretion of Catarrhal matter in the head; it will relieve Croup in from three to five minutes.

The best he ever saw.

"The best medicine for Coughs and Consumptive Complaints that ever I saw is Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific," so says JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of Boston.

Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific is sold by all Druggists. Price 50 cents and $1. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

JAPANESE MYTHOLOGY.

The Meaning of Some of the Figures Seen on Jars and Fans.

The creation was, according to tradition, brought about in this wise. In the dim ages of the past there existed a trinity who dwelt in space. Later came other deities (Kami), with separate existences, and after seven generations begotten from them, the creation, which was confined to Japan, was decided on and carried through in six stages, almost similar to those in our Pentateuch, the work being delegated to Isanaghi and his sister, Isanami. From the goddess sprang certain terrestrial deities, among whom were Ama-terasu, the beautiful goddess of the sun; Isukoyumi, the goddess of the moon, and Susano, god of the wind.

A story which finds frequent illustration in Japanese art is that of the quarrel between Ama-terasu and her brother and her consequent retirement to a cave, whence she was inveigled by the dancing of a goddess, variously named Okame, Ouzoume, or Uzume. It is narrated at length in Griffis' "Mikado's Empire," and Reed's "Japan," and is one of the fairy stories recently published in a delightfully illustrated form as a child's book under the title of "Yamata-no-Orochi." Masks of the fair dancer are to be found in every curio shop. The features upon these masks are always similar and have been handed down for centuries—a narrow forehead adorned with imperial spots of sable, puffed out cheeks, dimpled chin and laughing countenance. One of them is usually to be seen in every Japanese house. In her full length figures she usually carries in her hands a bundle of reeds and a dart bound round with herbs and little bells.

Many ancient customs still exist which originated in this quarrel, notably the gohei, or branches adorned with bits of silk and paper, which are hung in all Shinto places of worship, the drum upon which Ouzoume danced and the cocks who now inhabit the precincts of the temple, and which were then engaged to attract Ama-terasu's attention by crowing in concert. So, too, the cord of rice straw, which keeps away the visits of evil spirits, and the sacred burnished circular mirror, wherein the goddess beheld her likeness, and which is the origin of the round mirror of metal which Japanese women still use as their only looking glass. The dancing of Ouzoume before the cavern is imitated in the pantomimic dance still practiced in every Japanese village. Another frequent subject for illustration is Susano killing the eight headed dragon after he had induced him to partake of sake set in eight jars. His exploit is depicted upon the bank notes of the country. A sword, which he found in the tail of the dragon, is one of the three sacred emblems in the imperial regalia. He was the father of Dalkoku, the god of good fortune.—Art Journal.

Symbols in the Catacombs.

The following symbols, borrowed from the Scriptures, were frequently represented in the Catacombs, and relate to the virtues and duties of the Christian life: The dove, with or without the olive branch, the type of simplicity and innocence; the ship, representing sometimes the church as safely sailing through the flood of corruption, with reference to Noah's ark, sometimes the individual soul on its voyage to the heavenly home under the conduct of the storm controlling Saviour; the palm branch, which the seer of the Apocalypse puts into the hands of the elect as the sign of victory the anchor, the figure of hope; the lyre, denoting festal joy, sweet harmony; the cock, an admonition to watchfulness, with reference to Peter's fall; the hart, which pants for the fresh water brooks; and the vine, which, with its branches and clusters, illustrates the union of the Christians with Christ according to the parable (John xv, 1-6), and the richness and fullness of Christian life.—Professor Philip Schaff in The Century.

Australian Bush Life.

Practical jokes are very often played on a sheep station, especially on new chums. The most awkward horse is given to the newcomer, and the result eagerly watched for. Perhaps the Australian "buck jumper" is the most difficult horse in the world to sit. He allows himself to be mounted quietly, and then puts his nose between his knees, arches his back like a cat, and usually unseats his rider. They are sometimes taught to buck jump, and strangers are challenged to ride them. Some can even buck right out of the saddle without bursting the girths, and leave their rider behind on the ground. The black fellows in a station are very expert riders, and will keep their seats after the saddle has gone.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Selecting a Gaucho Leader.

It is related that a Gaucho army once selected its leader after the following exciting manner: A number of totally wild horses were driven into a corral whose only exit was a gateway above which was a cross bar. It was agreed that whoever should drop from the bar upon one of the animals as it rushed out and break it then and there without saddle or bridle should be their general. The feat was likely to cost the candidate his life, but it was successfully accomplished. Who will doubt that the fortunate man was a fit leader for such an army?—T. C. Harbaugh.

The Dude in Paris.

A model of fashion in Paris recently appeared at the theatre in this, as the latest agony in evening dress: He wore two studs; his coat collar and lapels were of mat silk; the tails of his coat were very short; his waistcoat buttoned high; his cravat was unadorned; his gloves were putty colored and without black stitching; the brim of his hat was flat, and his cane was gold headed and richly embossed. He carries a cane in order to keep his hands out of his pockets, which is pronounced to be a reprehensible fashion.—Paris Letter.

Delighting the Small Boys.

A performer in a winter circus in New York is delighting the small boys by picking up his trick donkey and carrying it out of the ring at the close of each performance. The animal weighs 600 pounds. The circus man began lifting it when it was young, and has kept it up ever since.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Dishonesty in Conversation.

Good men talkers have sometimes been accused of a certain dishonesty in conversation. That is, bring the subject round to a point on which they talk well—lying in ambush, as it were, and springing their own subject on the company.—M. E. W. Sherwood.

He Shut the Door.

M. Chevreul, when asked to account for his long life, said: "At fifty I shut the door on all my pleasures." He has lived for more than half a century an extremely simple and regular life, working actively all the time.—The Argonaut.

French Government Service.

Women employed by the French government are furnished with a hot lunch, breakfast, and tea, at a cost of from ten to fifteen cents, in a kitchen established for the purpose in government buildings. No letters are allowed to be delivered to them in the office. As to the quality of service rendered by the women, it is considered far superior to that of the men in matters of detail and everything which calls for manual dexterity. Their salary is less.—Chicago Herald.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachel's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

For sale by druggists and the Aunt Rachel Pad Co., Passaic, N. J.

Charles Ponzi, the humbug steerer recently arrested in New York, is the famous "Gold brick man" of a few years ago.

I have been a great sufferer from dry catarrh for many years, and I tried many remedies which helped me, but I had no one which did me so much benefit as Ely's Cream Balm. It completely cured me.—M. J. Lally, 39 Woodward Ave., Boston Highlands, Mass.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head—for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs. Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

Just Married.

How loving they are; this is always a sure sign. After the first year sometimes it don't hold good. When Charles comes home to you grouty and cross, snapping and snarling, unable to realize the nice dinner you have cooked, and feels as if there is a ton of pig iron in his stomach, he is troubled with dyspepsia, and Sulpher Bitters is the only medicine that will cure him.

Frederick's Respect for Women.

The late emperor of Germany disliked to hear any one speak slightingly of women. When he was crown prince an officer once remarked of a wounded comrade that he was "weeping like a woman." "Never make that comparison," said the crown prince with a frown. "Crying like an unweaned child would be better. Women have more fortitude than men."—New Orleans Picayune.

No Doubt of It.

"Don't my room look almost like a bower?" she asked, as she moved a poodle from one chair and a pug from another.

"Yes, dear," answered her friend, "a regular bow-wow-ser."—Detroit Free Press.

In the Amusing Comedietta Of "Used Up,"

Sir Charles Coldstream, a blase man of fashion, is made to deprecate everything in which everybody else is supposed to take an interest, with the languid remark that "there is really nothing in it." He even extended the criticism to the crater of Vesuvius, down which he looked but saw "nothing in it." Such characters are scarcer on this side of the Atlantic than abroad, but they exist here notwithstanding. Such men need a "fillip to nature" to medicinally stimulate their jaded appetite, overcome their lassitude, and renew the zest of existence. They and others upon whom the world's enjoyments are beginning prematurely to pall, will find in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a welcome and speedy renewal of vigor and health. Appetite returns, dyspeptic and bilious symptoms disappear, the nerves grow strong, and the hour of retirement is unfraught with apprehension of uneasy repose when this superlative tonic is employed. It remedies fever and ague, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Seymour Thatcher, M. D., of Hermon, N. Y., says Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry cures a cough by loosening and clearing the lungs and allaying irritation, thus removing the cause instead of drying up the cough and leaving the cause behind.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, derangement of the digestive organs, and the weakening effect of the changing season. CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. CALIFORNIA'S "GLORIOUS CLIMATE."

Very Fine, Indeed, During Certain Months of the Year.

And first of all I will try and tell something about this "glorious" climate (which could be much more appropriately called "slippery"), of which so much has been said and written. The fact is that the climate of California is a climate differing almost with every county, and to speak of the climate of California as a whole is greatly to mislead people, for you cannot say it is perfectly fine or detestably mean, although both could be said with truth by any one interested in saying the one or the other.

The climate, for example, of San Francisco during certain months of the year is beyond measure fine. Our eastern friends, leaving the frosty air and dying vegetation ushering in their long cold winters, ride right into our mild Indian summer, filled with full ripened fruits, luxurious flowers and perfect vegetation; or, leaving the frost and snows of Christmas, find here a bright, warm Italian winter, flowers in full bloom, fruits in plenty, etc., and tourists taking their trip at that time of the year are apt to return home and convey the idea of some wonderfully glorious, warm, delightful climate. But what about the cold fogs, that lie nearly half of the year like a heavy pall over the city, commencing early in the afternoon and disappearing only late in the mornings? What about the clouds of dust swept down by the cold winds from the ocean? What about the long, dry, dusty summer months, when everything is withered and parched, and all are fairly choked with dust and want of rain, and sickness and death are on every hand from unflushed sewers, etc.? What about the long, wearisome rains, although the rains are really the least disagreeable feature of all the ills of the San Francisco climate?

While all this is true of San Francisco, yet, right across the bay, in what might be called the suburbs (yet really San Francisco has no suburbs, an objectionable feature for commerce), the climate is milder—less fogs, less chilling winds, less dust, etc.; and, still again, as you leave San Francisco and travel southward the change in climate is more noticeable.

One can write most truthfully of the climate of California and yet contradict one's self at every other line. From all this the conclusion can justly be drawn that each one can find the climate they most like by a proper selection of county.

The climate of San Diego is written of as mild and equable and delightful, and many poor consumptives are enticed here, only to meet with disappointment, like one poor man (an example of many) who, arriving in San Diego, expecting to find in its mild and salubrious air a length of life, if not a permanent cure, was met, on descending from the cars, by such clouds of dust, such cold and piercing fog and wind, that, overcome by weakness and disappointment, he dropped on to the first seat, shivering and crying. Yet a few miles from San Diego, had he but known it, is a good, fine climate for consumptives. A friend of ours, a young man for whose life no hope was felt and who was carried to this part of the state, is now happy in the enjoyment of almost perfect health.—California Cor. Boston Transcript.

Silver and Gold Work.

The Russian authorities allow the merchants to cheat their customers in everything but furs, silver and gold plate, and adulterated food. The latter is prohibited from sale under penalty of imprisonment. Imitation furs must be marked so that the customer may tell what he is buying, and all silver and gold must bear the government brand to attest its fineness. There is no plated silver to be had, but the shops are full of the genuine solid article, in every possible form, and for every possible use, and it is generally sold at cost. You see little silver in the natural state. Spoons, knives, watches, chains, articles of personal adornment in every possible variety, plates, platters, cups, goblets, all sorts of tableware is made of silver and then gilded to look like gold, and gratify the Russian taste for display. The solid silver dinner service for the winter palace, which will serve 3,000 people, is gilded, and the shops along the Nevski Prospect and other fine streets are blazing with the same sort of stuff. But the merchant must inform the customer of the character of his wares. If he sells gilded silver for gold he goes to prison. The ladies of the country load themselves with ornaments of gilded silver, bracelets, chains, brooches, pins, and every other form of decoration. Even marble and wood is gilded. Everything is for display.—William Elroy Curtis in Chicago News.

Fish That Give Shocks.

At San Pedro and the various watering places from San Diego north the ray family makes itself disagreeably conspicuous. The smaller ones have a habit of hiding in the sand and presenting their spines for bathers' feet, while others are provided with electric batteries, which not rarely give the fishermen powerful shocks. I have known a man to be disabled for several days by harpooning one.

The Chinese monopolize the fishing in these waters, and are often victims of the practical jokes of the Mexican and American fishermen. An able bodied torpedo will be brought ashore at San Pedro or Monterey, and the whites will wager a green Chinaman that he cannot lift it. The fish appears to weigh about six or eight pounds, and John, after putting up his money, with a laugh at the simplicity of the American devils, takes hold with both hands and is stiffened out so quickly that often he can do nothing but hold the fish and roar with anguish until he is released. The shock given by these fishes has been compared to that of a single Leyden jar, and can be plainly felt by fifty persons in a circle.—Stockton Mail.

The Size of Rain Drops.

Variations in the size of rain drops are dependent upon the differences in the height from which they have fallen and to the amount of atmospheric disturbance present at the time. If fallen from a great height, the drops suffer gradual division into smaller and smaller parts, until they are converted into a mist. In calm weather, with the clouds near the earth's surface, the drops are large and heavy.—Globe-Democrat.

History of Honiton Lace.

Honiton lace has a curiously checkered history, with many fluctuations. It is said to have been first introduced by the Flemings, who took refuge in England to escape the persecutions of the Duke of Alva. Many Flemish names are still to be found in the neighborhood of Honiton, namely, Stocker, Murch, Maynard, Trump, etc. In 1660 there was such a demand for it that France thought it necessary to issue a royal ordinance providing that a mark should be affixed to imported English thread lace. Two great fires at Honiton in 1756 and 1767 gave the first check to its production. Queen Adelaide tried to revive it after twenty years of severe depression by ordering a skirt made of sprigs, copies of natural flower, commencing with the initials of her name; for a very debased and hideous set of patterns had come in. This does not seem to have produced a great revival of the trade, and when our present queen required her wedding lace it was found difficult to provide the workers, but eventually a dress worth £1,000 was made at the small fishing village of Beer.

The English royal family has been most constant patrons of Honiton lace, and has done immense good in keeping the trade alive. We will end by quoting a few quaint words from "Fuller's Devonshire Worthies," which sum up the plea for the revival: "Hereby many children who otherwise would be burdensome to the parish prove beneficial to their parents. Yea, many lame in their limbs, and impotent in their arms, if able in their fingers, gain a livelihood thereby; not to say that it saveth many thousands of pounds yearly formerly sent over seas to fetch lace in Flanders."—Saturday Review.

A Somnambulist's Feat.

A young gentleman of my acquaintance is walking about just now with what at first sight looks like a very bad case of sore throat. He carries his head twisted over his port shoulder and moves it as cautiously as if he thought the hinges were insecure. He is one of a firm of lawyers on Court street, and his business throws him in contact with many people every day. They usually ask him what is the matter, but such a question extracts nothing further than a grunt and the volunteered information that if he were not very busy he would be at home. This is a hint not to bother him, and I didn't. I got the story from another source. He is newly married to a charming young lady, and this, and the fact that he is yet young in the legal profession, and still feels remorse, tends to disturb his mind so that his slumbers are not very sound.

The other evening the bride was awakened by hearing a noise. A light was dimly burning, and by means of it she could see a tall, white figure standing on the footboard of the bed. She was going to scream, when she recognized her husband. "Charley," she cried, "what are you going to do?" "I think I'll take a dive, my dear," said he. And he did. He made a beautiful dive from the footboard of the bed into a Persian rug a few feet away. It took a long time for his wife to make him believe this story. He puts in most of his spare time now reading a book entitled "How to Cure Somnambulism."—Brooklyn Eagle.

New Varieties of Lilies.

There is a pretty Chinese fancy connected with these flowers, to the effect that if they blossom before a certain day the owner of them will live throughout the year. I was curious to know how many different kinds of lilies they have in China, and, chatting with the chief clerk of the state department on the subject, he kindly sent me the next day a roll of no less than twenty-five different kinds of lilies, hand painted in their natural color upon fine rice paper. Many of these are quite unknown in this country, while others are familiar.

The Chinese name for lily is uri, and they have such quaint given names as hagako, a beautiful scarlet flower; uba, a small white blossom; tepo, which is like the Bermuda ascension lily; sirato, a golden tiger lily; acasima, a small red lily; yama, a large white lily, the petals spotted with brownish red; takagima, a double yellow lily; bene sugi, a large, highly decorated flower, the long white petals striped with magenta; koke, a purple lily; siro kanoko, a white tiger lily, and ya yeteuko, a tiger lily three times doubled! It will be seen from this that there are possibilities for florists in the direction of the development of new varieties of lilies which have not yet been seen in this country.—Fuller Walker in New York Graphic.

What Constitutes a Ration.

An order issued from army headquarters lays down this rule as to what a soldier's ration shall be:

"By direction of the secretary of war, paragraph 2,150 of the regulations, is amended to read as follows:

"2,150. A ration is the established daily allowance of food for one person. For the United States army it is now composed as follows: Twelve ounces of pork or bacon or canned beef (fresh or corned) or one pound and four ounces of fresh beef, or twenty-two ounces of salt beef; eighteen ounces of soft bread or flour, or sixteen ounces of hard bread, or one pound and four ounces of corn meal. To every 100 rations fifteen pounds of beans or peas, or ten pounds of rice or hominy; ten pounds of green coffee, or eight pounds of roasted (or roasted and ground) coffee, or two pounds of tea; fifteen pounds of sugar; four quarts of vinegar; one pound and eight ounces of adamantine or star candles; four pounds of soap; four pounds of salt; four ounces of pepper, and to troops in the field, when necessary, four pounds of yeast powder to the 100 rations of flour."—Chicago Times.

An Event of Importance.

The visit of the sultan of Morocco to Algiers in order to communicate by cable with his representative at the Madrid conference is an event of some historical importance. For years the sultan opposed the laying of this cable, as he did not wish to bring Europe any nearer to his domain. It is fifty years nearly since a sultan of Morocco has deigned to set foot in Tangiers, a seaport town polluted by the presence of many Europeans.—New York World.

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

Impurities in the blood produce diseases. Bodily and mental health depend upon a healthy condition of the blood. The blood, particularly in the spring and during the hot summer months, becomes clogged with impurities, which poison it and generate disease. A harmless blood purifier, without a particle of mineral poison in it, such as mercury or potash, is necessary to remove these impurities and to restore the healthy tone of mind and body. The best purifier and tonic known to the world is Swift's Specific (S.S.S.). In regard to its wonderful purifying and tonic powers we give a few testimonials as follows:

Mr. Wm. A. Siebold, with Geo. P. Rowell & Co., 10 Spruce Street, New York, writes March 29th, 1887: "I feel it my duty, for the benefit of others who may be afflicted as I was, to write you this letter, which you can use as my testimony in any way you choose. I will answer any inquiry from others in relation to the facts herewith stated. In February last I suffered great pain and inconvenience from boils, all over my neck; I could not turn my head without acute pain and my blood was in poor condition. After trying all the usual remedies in such cases, and finding no relief, by the persuasion of Mr. J. W. Fears, Manager of your New York Office, I used one bottle S. S. S., and I improved rapidly and very soon I was entirely relieved of my "Job's Comforters." Now not a sign of my affliction can be seen. I feel strong and cheerful. S. S. S. is a fine tonic as proved in my case. I sleep soundly and my appetite is good."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a well-known physician writes from Ellaville, Georgia: "I use S. S. S. in convalescent fever cases with the best results. It will, in my judgment, prevent summer dysentery, if one will take a few bottles in the spring, thus preparing the bowels for the strains of summer."

Mrs. Scott Liston, 136 Zane street (Island), Wheeling, West Virginia, writes: "Having used S. S. S. for the blood, I can safely say that it beats anything I have used to cleanse the blood and make a new being out of a person."

Mr. M. S. Hamlin, Winston, N. C., writes: "I use it every spring. It always builds me up, giving me appetite and digestion, and enabling me to stand the long, trying, enervating hot summer days. On using it I soon become strong of body and easy of mind."

Defenders of American Industry.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

BLAINE AT HOME.

The steamship City of New York, having on board Hon. James G. Blaine, arrived at New York on Friday morning, the 10th inst. He was met down the bay by several steamer loads of friends, and was given an ovation from the landing to the Fifth Avenue hotel. He is in excellent health, and announces his intention of taking an active part in the campaign.

Yellow Fever.

Two cases of yellow fever were discovered in Jacksonville, Fla., Aug. 9th. One of the patients had been in the city six days, from Orlando, when taken sick; the other is a resident of Jacksonville. Other suspicious cases are reported, and an epidemic is feared.

Charleston, S. C., Mobile, Ala., and other places, have quarantined against Jacksonville, Fla., and its neighborhood, on account of yellow fever. Three new cases were reported in Jacksonville on the 10th, and there are thirteen cases at Manatee.

Congress have repeatedly, and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to insure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.—George Washington.

President Cleveland declines cautiously to dub himself a free trader, but he caters up a free trade position without disguise. —London Saturday Review.

The great interests of an agricultural, commercial and manufacturing nation are so linked in union together that no permanent cause of prosperity to one of them can operate without extending its influence to the others.—John Quincy Adams.

Mr. Cleveland demands in effect that there shall be a tariff for revenue purposes only. No tinkering with the tariff will suffice; no readjustment of duties will do. The only reform that common sense can accept of is one which unaffectedly substitutes the principle of unimpeded imports for that of tariff regulations.—London Standard.

The issue of Protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, as it concerns the prosperity of the present and of the generations yet to come.—James G. Blaine.

It may be admitted that large reductions in the duties on imported manufactured goods would produce great distress in many parts of the United States. The free importation of iron, coal and wool would be a great boom to British producers. * * * If it were accompanied with reductions in the tariff upon cotton, woolen and other manufactures the artisans of this country would derive a marked benefit from it.—The Scotsman.

The Ring in the Cliff: By Frank West Rollins. Boston: D. Lothrop Co. Price $1.25.

Here is a book which the boy whose taste has not been vitiated by dime novels will read with hearty enjoyment. It is a story of healthy adventure, full of life, and not overcrowded with incident. Its hero is a lad of seventeen, who from a child has been fascinated with sea-life, and who determines that when the time comes he will be a sailor. He feels that his father and mother will oppose the idea, and so keeps it to himself. He lives on the banks of the Piscataqua, not far from Portsmouth, and has daily opportunities of seeing the sloops and schooners which pass up and down the river, and of becoming acquainted with their skippers and crews. The time of the story is laid three quarters of a century ago, when long stretches of the river now lined with dwellings and mills, were overhung with trees, with numerous little coves where a vessel might anchor, securely hidden from the view of other craft upon the river. In one of these coves Brant Burroughs, for that is the name of the young lad, begins to build himself a boat. He has a friend who is a ship carpenter, who makes him a model, and helps him in securing the necessary lumber and framing it. At last the boat is finished, and Brant determines to make a stolen fishin[illegible]t, quieting his conscience w[illegible]gument that his parents have [illegible]forbidden his going away upon the [illegible], although he knows that they would do so had they any idea of his intentions. He succeeds in getting away quietly and unseen, and after a somewhat perilous voyage drops his anchor off Star Island among the scores of fishing smacks which make that place their rendezvous. In those days there was a thriving fishing business carried on there, and the little village of Gosport, now blotted out, numbered over five hundred inhabitants. By a fortunate circumstance Brant falls in with the very man who is able to advise and assist him, an old Gosport fisherman. Here his adventures begin. What they were and how they affected his fortunes we leave the reader to find out for himself. We need only say that some of them were remarkable enough for a much more ambitious book than "The Ring in the Cliff."

Worse Than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terrible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas of this belt country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately the latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used interally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No matter if you have used this remedy before, it will pay you to get a bottle and read the directions, or send for the pamphlet just to learn how to use it economically.

Superfine Flour.

There is no article of food more generally consumed than wheat flour in its various forms of bread and pastry, but chemists by examination find that by its use, mankind loses two-thirds of the elements that go to make up bone and muscle. These vital elements are the phosphates which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of health, and which nature has provided in the wheat grain, but man has removed from flour in the process of bolting. It was this fact that suggested the invention of Prof. Horsford of his preparation for a baking powder that would add these nutritious phosphates, and thereby supply the deficiency in the flour. In place of the alum, cream tartar, etc., used in common baking powders, he produced an acid phosphate, and thus makes a baking powder which not only raises the dough, but leaves in the bread the vital phosphates of which the flour has been deprived.

Hon. Levi P. Morton has resigned from the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific railroad. Sir George Stephenson has resigned the presidency of the road. Mr. Van Horn, late vice president, has been appointed president, and Hon. D. H. McInnis director in place of Mr. Morton.

By the capsizing of the sloop Flora B., of Pennsville, near Nescastle, Del., Aug. 8th, four married ladies and a little girl belonging to one of them, were drowned; also the two men in charge of the sloop. The ladies belonged to the most prominent families of Pennsville.

Over $17,000 was stolen from the mail on the Missouri Pacific railroad, Aug. 4th.

The democratic majority in the Alabama state election is estimated at 100,000.

Hon. John S. Wise announces his intention to leave Virginia and live in New York. He says that the anti-Mahone committee will probably surrender to Mahone.

George Pierce, an overseer in the shoe shop at Peterboro, has been found guilty of forgery and held in $300 to appear at the September term of court at Nashua. He signed the name of Mrs. King, a well known resident of Peterboro, to an order on the town agent for liquor.

Peculiar

Many peculiar points make Hood's Sarsaparilla superior to all other medicines. Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's. Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is now more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time, and retained its popularity and confidence among all classes of people so steadfastly. Do not be induced to buy other preparations, but be sure to get the Peculiar Medicine,

THE WEATHER.

For New England to-day:—
Fair, cooler weather, variable winds.

TROUBLE IN THE FOREST.

As there is a court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in this city, the following despatch of the 8th inst., from London, Eng., is of local interest:

The high court of foresters, sitting at Reading, has carried by a vote of 473 to ninety-three a motion revoking the powers of the subsidiary high court of America, and suspending American courts until they comply with the rules regarding the admission of colored persons.

The order of Foresters is of English origin, and in that country does not regard color in considering applications for admission. Recent action of the high court of America excluding colored men from the order is the cause of the action of the British high court, which is the grand high cockalorum of the organization throughout the world.

YORK COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

The largest republican county convention held in York county, Me., for years, was held at Alfred on the 9th inst. There were present three bands of music and a drum corps, and white hats without number. Frank M. Higgins was chosen chairman, and the following nominations were made: For senators, Charles H. Frost of Sanford, L. H. Kendall of Biddeford, Robert W. Lord of Kennebunk; for county commissioner, Isaah Hanscom of Lebanon; for judge of probate, Nathaniel Hobbs of North Berwick; for register of probate, Frank Watson of Sanford; for sheriff, Samuel C. Hamilton of Saco; for county attorney, Horace H. Burbank of Saco; for treasurer, Charles H. Prescott of Biddeford. A large mass meeting in the afternoon was addressed by Thomas B. Reed and Henry B. Cleaves. Two hundred members of the British-American Association of Sanford were present.

MARITIME NOTES.

About eleven o'clock Wednesday night, Aug. 8th, the steamer Eleanora, from Portland for New York, when off Boon island ran down the schooner Portland, sixty-five tons, of Annapolis, Nova Scotia, bound for her home port from Boston with 550 bbls. of flour and meal. The schooner was cut half in two amidships, and partially dismasted. The steamer took off the crew of six men, and towed the schooner to Portland. The steamer was not harmed.

Some weeks ago there was a story telegraphed from Philadelphia, purporting to be a report made by a vessel there, regarding the blowing up of a schooner off Cape Henlopen, supposed to have been the former schooner yacht Rambler, bound from New York for Aspinwall with sixty tons of dynamite on board for the use of a contractor on the isthmus. This hair-raising tale related that after the big explosion "nothing remained in sight except the empty and blackened hull of the ill-fated craft." The story, which was much funnier than the ordinary funny item of the newspaper paragrapher, of course deceived no seaman or dynamiter, as sixty pounds of dynamite, not to mention sixty tons, exploding in the hold of a vessel of the Rambler's size, would have scattered her all over the Western ocean. The real end of the Rambler is announced in a despatch of late date from Aspinwall, which says: "The schooner yacht Rambler, which sailed hence July 7th for Boca del Toro, lost her rudder at sea, sprung a leak, and reached Boca del Toro in distress, where she was condemned on a survey called by her master. Crew sent to New York."

Dr. Gage and Associate Physicians, and Their Great Work.

Probably no physician in New England is better and more favorably known, says a New Hampshire exchange, than is Dr. Gage, the gifted specialist, who has treated more than fifteen thousand patients in this state, the announcement of his visits each month being the signal for a grand rally of a multitude of invalids. His success is indeed phenomenal and the reports of marvellous cures would fill this entire paper, the like of which was never known in the history of medical practice. The following is a fair sample:

Mr. Editor: A few months ago my daughter was laying at the point of death. She had a complication of troubles, a terrible cough, raising an immense quantity, a discharging sore upon her hip which rendered her perfectly helpless. Our family physician gave us no hope, but with a mother's will and determination to save her perishing child if possible, I hastened to consult Dr. Gage. Although he did not see her he nevertheless understood the case and his remedies have wrought a miracle—almost—by restoring my child to perfect health. I thank God that I consulted Dr. Gage.

Mrs. B. F. WILSON,

Mrs. Orrin Webber, Bedford, N. H., a cripple and on crutches 14 years with terrible ulcers on her limbs; soundly cured.—Geo. H. Stevens, North Lyndeboro, N. H., cured of terrible burning and itching humor which covered the entire body.—Mrs. Wm. E. Russ, North Hartland, Vt., given up by counsel, with a large ovarian tumor, heart disease and dropsy; perfectly cured and tumor disappeared. Doctor did not see her.—Oliver Peiren, Concord, N. H., wife cured of ovarian and female difficulties after she had been made worse by the usual treatment.—C. L. Bullum, North Monroe, helpless with spinal disease, involving liver, kidneys and bladder; perfectly cured and the Doctor did not see him.—Isaac Buttrick, Londonderry, N. H., son cured of discharging ears and deafness.—Mrs. A. L. Colby, West Andover, N. H., given up in the last stage of consumption; is now well.—Mrs. L. A. Sawyer, Keene, N. H., terrible bleeding from lungs; cured.—Amos Young, Derry Depot, N. H., Catarrh had eaten a hole through roof of mouth; cured.—Miss Lizzie Williams, 76 Blodgett st., Manchester, N. H., blindness cured.—Dr. Levi B. Dodge, Waterford, Vt., kidney disease with frightful hemorrhages; given up by counsel; cured, and the Doctor did not see him.—Thomas Tuke, Levi Burt, Littleton, N. H., and hundreds of other cases, cured of nervous debility in its various stages.—Mrs. J. E. Fields, Milford, N. H., cured of a complication of female difficulties after she had doctored 9 years with others.—Son of W. B. Hill, Plaistead, N. H., was a most terrible case of heart disease, dropsy and epileptic fits; got well, went to work and has not had a fit for two years.—G. Ambrose, No. Londonderry, N. H., cured of cancer.—C. C. Hall, Boscawen, N. H., cured of cancer.—C. B. Marshall, Nashua, N. H., son cured of epileptic fits.

Our readers have doubtless often noticed that Hood's Sarsaparilla is well spoken of in the newspapers. The press is quick to recognize merit, and does not hesitate to give praise where it is due. The following is from the Baptist Weekly, a leading religious paper:

"Advertising may bring an article prominently before the public, but no advertising can long help it if it has not real merit. Hood's Sarsaparilla is well advertised; but the best proof of its value is that so many persons use it on the recommendations of friends who have proved its peculiar virtues."

Rockingham Lodge, I. O. G. T., of this city, has elected Charles T. Wiggin and Charles W. Humphreys representatives, and Ida W. Dearing and Louise Rowland alternates, to the annual session of the grand lodge of the state to be held at Rochester in October.

A few teaspoonfuls of Preston's Cologne added to the bath renders it delightfully refreshing.

Mr. Frank W. Hice, as some of our esteemed contemporaries would designate him "the popular saloonist," has purchased of Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Marcy the house at the corner of Islington and Cabot streets, and will remove his residence thither in the fall.

A gentleman of ward three who has voted the democratic ticket for over forty years, threw his first republican ballot on Tuesday, Aug 7th, at the municipal election. He will throw his second in November and aid in electing an American national administration and house of representatives.

Canton Senter, I. O. O. F., of this city, have accepted an invitation to participate in the anniversary ceremonies at Hampton on Wednesday, Aug. 15th. They will go out in barges at seven o'clock A. M., and will be guests of the Odd Fellows' lodge of Hampton.

Mrs. George M. Ayers of Water street is visiting Mr. Henry Gray and wife of Great Falls.

Mr. George P. Anderson and wife, of Melrose, Mass., formerly of this city, are visiting at Mr. Chandler M. Hayford's.

There is a dispute over the award of prizes to the winners in the yacht race from Annisquam around White island and back, sailed on the 4th inst. The judges failed to take the finishing time of the yachts, and as there was to be allowance, it is likely that the affair will be declared "no race" on that account.

The Ossipee, Galena and Yantic of the North Atlantic squadron sailed from Newport, R. I., for Halifax, on the 10th inst.

The great change that has gone on in the population of Portsmouth of late is quite noticeable. At the last democratic caucus of ward one it was supposed that 150 were present. An ex-mayor of Portsmouth, a native of the ward who has always been active as a member of the political committees, said afterward to another ex-member, who was not present at the caucus, "If you had been there you would not have known them, for I only knew about thirty of the whole lot."

Mr. Joseph H. Jameson on Friday received two swordfish weighing 780 lbs., which were bought by Joshua M. Vaughan for sale at York beach.

Governor Marble of Maine has appointed and commissioned Col. F. W. Guptil of Old Orchard as public administrator for the county of York.

CONGREGATIONAL CONVENTION.

The 79th annual meeting of the General Association of the Congregational Churches of New Hampshire will be held at East Derry on the 11th, 12th and 13th of September. During the meeting Rev. Wm. A. McGinley of this city will read an essay on "The Bible the Standard of Christian Doctrine and Life."

Y. M. C. A. CONVENTION.

Y., who conducts the singing with Rev. Dr. Pentecost in his evangelistic work, and Prof. C. J. Jackson of this state, will have the singing in charge, or in case Prof. Stebbins cannot come, Mr. Sankey will officiate in his stead. Prof. Stebbins is regarded by good judges to be the best singer of Gospel Hymns in the country. Mrs. Stebbins is also a fine singer, and, if able, will accompany her husband. Rev. C. E. Harrington of Keene, Dr. J. R. Armstrong of Nashua, and Dr. C. B. Crane of Concord, will deliver addresses; and E. B. Dillingham of Hartford, G. H. Shaw of Middleboro, E. A. Until your hair becomes dry, thin, and gray before giving the attention needed to preserve its beauty and vitality. Keep on your toilet-table a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor—the only dressing you require for the hair—and use a little, daily, to preserve the natural color and prevent baldness.

Thomas Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky., writes: "Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. Tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best hair-restorer in the world."

"My hair was faded and dry," writes Mabel C. Hardy, of Delavan, Ill.; "but after using a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it became black and glossy."

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires vigilance, abstinence, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

OH, WHAT A COLD!

This is the season for sudden changes in the weather, and a great many "take cold" either in their Head or on their Lungs, causing Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. These troubles can be soon relieved and cured by taking Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific, which acts directly on the Throat and Lungs, entirely removing these difficulties.

Cured his boy of Croup.

C. M. BROOKS, Lowell, Mass., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific as a cure for Coughs, Colds, and Croup. I used it in my family last winter with the best results. Two or three doses cured my little boy of Croup, for which I am very thankful."

You can cure that Cough in a short time. You can cure your Catarrh if you persist in its use, as it will stop the secretion of Catarrhal matter in the head; it will relieve Croup in from three to five minutes.

The best he ever saw.

"The best medicine for Coughs and Consumptive Complaints that ever I saw is Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific," so says JOHN MCLAUGHLIN, of Boston.

Ingalls' Throat and Lung Specific is sold by all Druggists. Price 50 cents and $1. Prepared only by the INGALLS MEDICAL CO., Lowell, Mass.

WHOLESALE BUFFALO HUNTING.

Narrow Escape of a Party of White Men. A Thrilling Sight.

They heard strange noises, and looking toward the west beheld a great black surging mass, waving and rolling up across the prairie, half hidden by great clouds of dust, which were only occasionally blown away by the brisk autumn wind. It was the great herd of buffalo and they had been stampeded by the Indian hunters. The roar of the hoofs upon the dry earth was like the low and sullen thunder. The vanguard of the herd was yet more than a mile away, but the dark line stretched to right and left almost as far as the eye could reach, and our hunters saw that instant and precipitate flight was necessary in order to save their lives. They specially chose the northward as offering the shortest and best direction by which to escape the coming avalanche, and, sinking the spurs deep into their terror stricken beasts, they flew with the velocity of an arrow across the wild prairie. A mile was covered in a few seconds, and yet they were not past the herd, which was rapidly closing in upon them.

They turned their horses' heads partly in the direction the buffaloes were going, and, urging them to their utmost speed, finally passed the outer line of the herd just as the leaders passed by. Then, having reached a place of safety, they dismounted, and, throwing their bridle reins over their arms, commenced to load and fire into the herd with all possible rapidity, nearly every shot killing or disabling an animal. It took nearly half an hour for the rolling, surging, angry horde to pass the point where our hunters stood, and as the rear guard came in sight there came a new and still more terrible scene in the great tragedy.

More than 100 Indians were in hot pursuit of the savage beasts. They were mounted on wild and almost ungovernable bronchos, who were frothing at the mouth, charging and cavorting among the fleeing game. The white foam dropped in flakes and bubbles from all parts of their bodies. Their nostrils were distended, their eyes flashed fire, and they seemed as eager as their wild masters to deal death to their victims. The savage riders seemed beside themselves with mad, ungovernable passion.

Their faces were painted in the most glaring colors, their bright and many colored blankets fluttered in the wind, secured to the saddle only by an end or a corner, their long black hair streaming back like the pennant at the mast head of a ship, and their deep, black eyes gleamed like diamonds in a dungeon. Arrow after arrow flew from deep strung bows and sunk to the feathered end in the quivering flesh of the shaggy monsters. Ponderous spears were hurled with the power and precision of giants and struck down the defenseless victims as a sturdy woodman strikes down the frail sapling in his path.

"Crack!" "crack!" came from rifles, and "ping!" "ping!" from carbines and revolvers. Hundreds of shots were fired by those who carried firearms, and before these murderous weapons the poor bison sank like ripened grain before the reaper's blade.

One young warrior, more ardent and fearless than the rest, had forced his high strung steed far into the middle of the solid phalanx, where the horse was finally impaled upon the horns of a monster bull. He and his rider were tossed like sheaves of wheat into the air; then both sank to earth, and were instantly trodden into the dust.

At last the great storm had passed, and our friends watched until it faded away into the distance and disappeared from their view. Then came the squaws, the boys and the old men, to dispatch the wounded and to skin and cut up the dead. These were strewn all over the prairie, and not a tithe of them were or could be saved by all the people, white and red, assembled there.—G. O. Shields in Outing.

Chinese Progress in Telegraphy.

The Chinese are fast extending their telegraph system, and it will not be many months before every town and hamlet of any size in the empire will have a telegraph office. In extending the lines a great deal of work has been necessary, and several large rivers had to be crossed. This was difficult work owing to the great floods that at different seasons of the year cause them to overflow their banks and sweep everything before them. Some of these rivers, when at the flood, are from five to eight miles in width. In extending the work across the rivers it was found necessary to use the heaviest kinds of cables, but at times these were torn away and the work was delayed. To offset this mishap a laid line was built to high points and the wires were run overhead. One of these overhead cables has a span of 1,690 yards. This aerial line is the second longest in the world. The offices are daily increasing, and the work of construction is being engineered by Americans and Englishmen. Much of the material used in the construction of the system is manufactured in this country.—Demorest's Monthly.

Lending Keys to Strangers.

The wiles of the criminal classes are often so ingenious that I can't help believing that if those who practice them were to turn their energies into other courses they would attain no small meed of honor and fame. Some little time ago, for example, a burglar was caught red handed in a strong room, opening a safe with a key that could not have been more perfect had it been supplied by the maker of the lock. The man, after having been convicted, was asked to say how he had obtained the key.

"Nothing easier," he replied. "We knew who carried the key and what it was like, so me and my pals got into the same railway carriage with your manager when he was going home one day. One of us had a bag which he couldn't open. 'Has any gentleman a key?' he asked. Your manager produced his bunch, and my pal, who had wax in his palm, while appearing to open his bag, took a likeness of the key of the safe. There's the secret for you."—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

The Season of Sackcloth.

It has been noted that society people enjoy the season of sackcloth and ashes fairly well, if the sackcloth is made according to the latest fashion, and the ashes are ashes of roses.—New York Tribune.

NOCTURNE.

Soft night with the touch of a lover
Is waking the universe;
The forces of nature in chorus
A thousand responses rehearse.

The pale moon shining in heaven
Draweth in rapture the main;
The stars go singing together,
Joining in love's refrain.

The warm night breezes whisper;
Gently murmurs the sea;
The earth feels love's heart beating
And trembles in ecstacy.

They all to my soul are speaking;
Quiet and dumb I lie;
And yet, though my lips are silent,
Flashes my heart reply.

—Adeline E. Knapp in Godey's Lady's Book.

American Women Writers.

The green, seething of American women writers, says Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett is devoted to old armor; Miss Mary L. Booth, of Harper's Bazar, to old coins; Mrs. Frank Leslie, to laces; Jennie June, to rare china; Anna Katharine Green, to illuminated books and old missals, and Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, to rare prints.—Exchange.

To the Delicate and Malarious.

The most incredulous are convinced of the virtues of Aunt Rachel's Malarial Bitters upon a trial of them. Their base is Speer's port wine, with herbs and roots so favorably known to the medical profession and the community at large as the best cure for malaria. They are all that can be desired by the most feeble victims of malaria.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head—for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs. Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood; he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do?—and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor?" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

Would Cost Too Much.

No, Patti has no babies. The family have decided that they can't afford it. When they realized that it would cost the youngster £100 every time he wanted his mother to sing him to sleep, cash up, or no concert, they decided that no baby could stand it without mortgaging the nursery and fittings.—London Tid Bits.

Tobacco's Absorptive Qualities.

A leaf of tobacco laid for two hours within six feet of open kerosene will be found to be as rank as possible with the smell and flavor of the oil, and even when dried and pressed into heavy hogsheads will take the odor from other articles in the hold of a ship, even from sugar.—New York World.

From Birth to the Grave

We carry with us certain physical traits, as we do certain mental characteristics. Insomuch that psychologists have striven to designate by generic titles certain temperaments—as the billious, the nervous, the lymphatic. The individual with a sallow complexion is set down as billious, often rightly so. If the saffron in the hue of his skin is traceable to bile in the blood, its presence in the wrong place instead of the liver, will also be evinced by fur on the tongue, pain beneath the right ribs and through the right shoulder-blade, sick headache, constipation, flatulence and indigestion. For the relief of this very common, but not essentially perilous complaint, there is no more genial and thorough remedy than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is also a beneficent tonic and strength promoter, and a widely esteemed remedy for and preventive of fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles.

The main building of Wells college at Aurora, N. Y., was burned Aug. 9th. Loss over $200,000.

How Adamson's Balsam Does Such Good.

It expels the mucous from the throat and the air passages of the head, and leanses the mucous membrane. It alleys inflammation, puts a stop to tickling in the throat and coughing, and enables the patient to rest.

Uncle Sam to the effete monarchist: "Gentlemen, I'm hospitable, but I am not keeping a poorhouse or a penitentiary."

Young, old, and middle aged, all experience the wonderfully beneficial effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young children, suffering from sore eyes, sore ears, scald head, or with any scrofulous taint, become healthy and strong by the use of this medicine. Six bottles, $5.

The United Ireland of Dublin says the Parnell commissioner is a fraud; that it is packed, and that the government is playing with loaded dice.

Seymour Thatcher, M. D., of Hermon, N. Y., says Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry cures a cough by loosening and clearing the lungs and allaying irritation, thus removing the cause instead of drying up the cough and leaving the cause behind.

The session of the international literary congress to be held at Venice on Sept. 15th will be devoted to the discussion of the American copyright law.

It Is Useless

For young ladies who are troubled with freckles, pimples, moth and tan and a bad skin generally to use liquid paints or dry powders, for they only make the skin look well for the time being. To have a good complexion you must have pure blood. Use Sulphur Bitters and your skin will be fair and your complexion rosy.—Young Ladies' Magazine.

A recent visitor to Mr. Beecher's once beautiful Peekskill farm says it is the picture of desolation.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, derangement of the digestive organs, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning the digestion, and giving strength to the whole system. Now is the time to take it. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A Great Surprise

Is in store for all who use Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs, the great guaranteed remedy. Would you believe that it is sold on its merits and that any druggist is authorized by the proprietor of this wonderful remedy to give you a sample bottle free? It never fails to cure acute or chronic coughs. All druggists sell Kemp's Balsam. Large bottles 50c and $1. ai8

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles.

SYMPTOMS — Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue numors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester. geowtjans9

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

PROTECT OUR BREAD.

The machinery of the law cannot be put at work too speedily or too vigorously against the wholesale adulteration of the things we eat. Both the health and the pockets of the people demand protection.

There is no article of food in general use more wickedly adulterated than the lower grades of baking powder.

These baking powders contain either lime, which, introduced into the system in too free quantities, causes serious disorders of the kidneys; alum, a corrosive poison, or lime phosphates and sulphates, which are condemned by physicians as deleterious in their effect when taken under certain physical conditions.

For raising bread, biscuit or other food only the very best and purest baking powder should be employed.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder makes it pre-eminently the most useful and wholesome leavening agent known. Containing no lime, alum, phosphate or other impurity, it leaves no alkaline or acid residuum in the food, and its use insures pure, light and sweet bread, biscuit and cake, that are perfectly digestible and wholesome whether hot or cold, fresh or stale. Its leavening power has been determined the highest whenever tested by official authority, and all chemists and writers on food hygiene commend it for its sterling qualities.

The sale of adulterated baking powders has been prohibited by statute in several localities. It will be in the interests of the public health when their sale is made a misdemeanor every where, and the penalties of the law are rigidly enforced.

SLUMBER SONG.

The south wind softly comes and goes,
With secret whisper in its sighs
That lulls the night to sweet repose;
Dreams wait to snare thine eyes
Where love's light glows and glorifies!
Sweetheart, slumber—I will keep watch o'er thy sleep.

From out the scented solitudes
A wafted fragrance fills the air;
Enchanted where sweet silence broods
The night wind lifts thy silken hair
To kiss thine eyes to dreams most fair!
Sweetheart, slumber—I will keep watch o'er thy sleep.

Yet, as the shadows fitful grow,
The wind voice hath another tone,
Its utterance seems weird and slow,
My sights are mingling with thine own,
Lift thy soft lips close to mine own
And slumber, sweetheart, as I keep watch o'er thy sleep.

And thus I fold thee nearer me—
Thy dear face so against my breast—
My heart throbs inner melody,
My soul, as with thy vision blest,
Is blest to shine in dreams to rest
And slumber, sweetheart, o'er thy sleep my watch I keep!

—Harriet Maxwell Converse in Home Journal.

Cause of Night Blindness.

The night movements of the Russian troops have recently been rendered difficult by the number of soldiers attacked with hemeralopia (night blindness). It is well known that this affection is due generally to a lack of proper food. Meisner saw in Podolia an epidemic of this disease produced during a religious excitement, when bread was the principal article of diet, which disappeared when animal food was again taken.—Science.

For Heating Passenger Cars.

To provide means of heating passenger cars by steam when the locomotive is detached a "blizzard heater," so called, has been devised, consisting of a firebrick pot and a telescopic chimney, on the principle of the traveler's pocket drinking cup. When not in use the whole thing occupies only ten and one-half inches of space, and may be shoved under a seat and out of the way. It is hung by chains from the car roof and floor.—Frank Leslie's.

Extracting Teeth from Indians.

A dentist in Calgary, Manitoba, has been busy lately extracting teeth from Indians. It is stated that before the advance of civilization, when the natives subsisted solely on buffalo meat, decayed teeth were unknown among them. Braves who stand the torture of the sun dance without flinching are reduced to a state of abject terror when they feel the cold grip of the forceps.—New York Evening World.

Anecdote of Bergh's Boyhood.

It is said that the late Henry Bergh, when a boy, had a favorite dog, which was his faithful friend and companion. The dog was enticed from home and cruelly tortured by some brutal ruffians until it died. Young Bergh felt the loss keenly.

"I may never see Pilot again," he said, "but if I live to be a man I will make life easier for his kind."—Youth's Companion.

Not Affected by Some Poisons.

Poison for some animals is food for others. Hogs can eat henbane or hyocyamus, which is fatal to dogs and most other animals. Dogs and horses are not easily poisoned with arsenic. Goats eat water hemlock with impunity; pheasants, stramonium; rabbits, belladonna; and morphia is said to be innocuous to pigeons. —Chicago Herald.

Sanitary Inspection.

London has a sanitary inspection company, regularly incorporated, that for a fixed fee inspects your plumbing and tells you whether you are breathing sewer gas or ordinary air.—New York Sun.

A Plagiarist in the Pulpit.

Imagine a popular preacher in a London pulpit, with a grave old gentleman sitting at the foot of it, waiting as it were, with a landing net for plagiarisms, and informing the congregation whenever he caught one. "That is Shylock's," he said at the third sentence; at the seventh, "That is Tillotson's." The preacher, who knew that there were plenty more to come, was in a pretty state; if he did it again he made up his mind to speak to the man. "That is Blair's," came out at the tenth sentence. "Fellow," said the preacher, leaning over the pulpit, "if you interrupt again you shall be turned out." The old gentleman looked round on the congregation with the same calm confidence of recognition as before, and, without moving a muscle of his countenance, observed, "That's his own."—The Argonaut.

South Pacific Island Products.

Both New Britain and New Ireland are exceedingly fertile. Every tropical product can be raised here with success. The inhabitants have abundance of provisions in the shape of bananas, taro, yams, sweet potatoes, bread fruit and cocoanuts, but very little fruit, although the latter is being introduced by the missionaries and traders. Unlike most other volcanic islands in the Pacific, there is no rocky soil to be found here; everywhere it is a deep, rich vegetable loam. In most tropical countries the soil has to be cleared of a thick growth of jungle before cultivation becomes possible; here nothing but long grass obstructs the efforts of the agriculturist. Cotton, coffee, sugar cane and tea could be raised with little trouble, yet there are probably not 100 acres of these products in cultivation in the entire group, the great drawback to commerce here being the scarcity of cheap labor, for no native will work for another for any length of time unless well paid with the highly prized divara.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Cranks at the German Capital.

The number of deranged people trying to gain access to the emperor of Germany is remarkable. Hardly a day passes without such an occurrence. The other day two such unfortunates entered the palace simultaneously. It was a man and a woman. The latter was the wife of a poor boatsman, asserting that she was a near relative of the emperor's and had to see him after years of absence. The man was well dressed, with a look of distinction about him, and a flow of white hair on his head and long whiskers, altogether a venerable looking, sympathetic figure. He said he had engaged to marry the daughter of the king of Italy, and being a German and a subject of the emperor he had to obtain his majesty's permission before perfecting the marriage. Both persons were taken to the insane ward of the Hospital of the Charite at Berlin.—Foreign Letter.

Knicknacks in Wood.

Early in the present year the mania for knicknacks in pale shaded and painted woods took a firm hold of Parisians, in whose gay city the idea originated. At first these productions were very crude, but that these things were fancied was sufficient to lead to many improvements in the various colors and varnishes used in this method, which is known as the "vernis Martin process," until now the work accomplished is really artistic. It is not likely, either, that it will ever become very common. The work requires great care and patience, and if these be not exercised it will be sure to result in failure. Great skill is not called for. Any one fairly clever with the brush may undertake the work without fear.—Philadelphia Evening Telegram.

Defenders of American Industry.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ORPHANS' HOME.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 8th.

Mr. Editor: Will you kindly allow me a brief space in your paper in the interest of this institution? I find people in different parts of the state who seem to know very little of the Home, or of the work which it is accomplishing. The institution is located in the town of Franklin, on the old Daniel Webster homestead, about sixteen miles north of Concord on the Northern railroad. There is connected with the Home an excellent farm of 180 acres. The location is the most healthful and delightful imaginable. The buildings are ample and well adapted to the work we have in hand. Recent improvements and repairs have been made, involving an expenditure of about $1800. We take orphan and destitute children three years old and upward, from all parts of the state. We furnish them a Home—with all that the word means of care, support, protection, sympathy and love.

We sustain an excellent school almost the entire year. The children are taken to church and Sunday school on the Sabbath in a barge, the gift of the Sunday schools of the state. We have almost forty children at the present time. Children given to the Home are supported gratuitously until such time as good, permanent homes can be secured for them. Others are supported for a small compensation, and remain in the institution at the pleasure of those placing them here.

The Home is a "State institution" only in the sense that its work is confined to the limits of the state. It is supported wholly by the gifts of benevolent people. Our constant needs are money for current expenses, clothing, bedding and household supplies. We need also to be remembered by benevolent people, in bequests and gifts of money, large and small, for our Permanent Fund. This will hasten the time when the institution will be self-supporting.

Another very pressing need is a Nursery Department. We are constantly receiving applications to take babies and young children, some cases the most distressing. We cannot take them for want of ability to care for them. A nursery department would be the most beneficent of charities; $25,000 would splendidly equip and endow such a department. I am sure the trustees would gladly immortalize the name of the man or woman who would give that amount by affixing the donor's name to that of institution. It might be like this: "New Hampshire Orphans Home and —— Nursery." The man who would cause his name to be put in this blank space, would have the benedictions of Heaven and of hundreds of heart broken mothers. In the coming years thousands of children would rise up to call him blessed. Is there are not some millionaire who would like to do this most benevolent deed? J. NOYES, Superintendent.

September Excursions.

Eighteen different excursions are announced by Messers. Raymond & Whitcomb for the month of September. The parties will travel under special escort, visiting the most desirable resorts in New England, the Middle States and Canada, while one of the parties will visit the battlefield of Gettysburg, the Luray caverns, the Natural Bridge of Virginia, Richmond, Washington, etc. The experience of Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb gives them the ability to plan and execute the most satisfactory pleasure and sight-seeing tours, and their patrons are largely old travellers, who fully understand and appreciate the advantages gained. In addition to the "Eighteen Tours," the firm advertise several longer autumn excursions including two to southern California, the Pacific Northwest and California (one including also the Yellowstone National Park), and two to Colorado. Descriptive circulars of the various tours may be obtained of W. Raymond, 296 Washington street, opposite School street, Boston, Mass.

RAILROAD ITEMS.

Samuel Bergen, a brakeman, was run over at Keene on the 11th inst., and both legs and one hip crushed, the injuries being fatal. He leaves a wife and seven children.

A train of eighteen passenger coaches, drawn by two engines and containing an excursion party from Worcester, Mass., went to Old Orchard beach on the 11th inst. by way of the Worcester & Nashua, Nashua & Rochester, Portsmouth, Great Falls & Conway and Boston & Maine railroads. The cars were packed with the pleasure seekers.

Frank W. Knight, purchasing agent of the Maine Central railroad, and Ira W. Pierce, a blacksmith, on Saturday, the 11th inst., in the station yard at Portland crawled under a freight train to make some measurement, and on backing out got upon a neighboring track, not noticing that a freight train was being pushed down that track by a shifter, and both were struck. Knight died in less than two hours, leaving a wife and child. Pierce may recover.

A dividend of three per cent is payable on the preferred stock of the Eastern Railroad Co. One would naturally prefer this kind of stock to that which pays dividends only occasionally.

MARITIME NOTES.

The sloop Helena, of Kittery Point, Tobey master, came in on Saturday with 200 good mackerel, taken with hooks.

The yacht Anne, James Hull master, ran into Three Tree island on Saturday afternoon, and carried away her bowsprit and head gear.

The schooner yacht Flossie, of Boston, Capt. Frank Rowe, arrived at Commercial wharf on Saturday to await a company from Boston, who arrived Sunday, and on Sunday evening she was ready to sail for Mt. Desert at the first favorable opportunity. She is fifty-two feet long, sixteen feet beam, measures 28.31 tons, is of good model, sails well, and has fine accommodations. She has been cruising for the past three weeks along the New England coast between Plymouth, Mass., and the western boundary of Maine. Capt. Rowe is a native of this city, and well acquainted along the coast; he is an experienced pilot for Newburyport harbor, having taken many vessels over the dangerous bar at the mouth of the Merrimac.

The race for Goelet cups took place off Newport, R. I., Aug. 10th. There was a light and unsatisfactory breeze during the first part of the race, but a fine breeze at the end. The big sloops were from 8 1-2 to nine hours going over the course, the Volunteer winning, by actual and corrected time, Katrina second, Puritan third and Mayflower fourth. The Volunteer beat the Puritan 17 min. 32 sec., and the Mayflower 38 min. 40 sec. The Sachem won in the schooner class, Grayling second and Sea Fox third. The Volunteer's actual and corrected time were alike, 8 h. 21 min. 35 sec.; the Sachem's actual time was 8 h. 40 min. 48 sec., and her corrected time 8 h. 27 min. 48 sec., showing that she held the crack sloop down to a six-minute beat.

The steamer Oceanic went out crowded on both her trips to the Shoals on Saturday. The rain, fog and cool temperature on Sunday prevented her receiving the customary amount of patronage on that day.

A big steam yacht, the Sagamore, of and from Providence, R. I, for Bar Harbor, anchored between Badger's island and the navy yard on Sunday. She is a new boat, only three months old, built at Bath, Me., registers 395 tons, and is fitted with three masts, the foremast having yards across. She has a large company on board.

The schooner Mary Willey, Williams, from Bangor with lumber to John H. Broughton, arrived at Broughton's wharf on Sunday afternoon. She left Bangor on Saturday, the 4th inst., and has been detained by fog and foul weather ever since.

A despatch of Aug. 10th from Kennebunkport says: "The cutter yacht Unida of Boston, Schwab, from Portland, went ashore during a dense fog near Mousam river. Crew saved; yacht stripped. The garboard is broken, and she is otherwise injured. There is some hope of getting her off."

The Joggins timber raft arrived off Riker's island on Friday evening, and anchored for the night, it being intended to put on four powerful tugs Saturday morning to tow it through Hell Gate to Leary's yard.

President Cleveland did not see fit to have the White House draped in mourning on Saturday, when the general of the army was buried. The flag was half-masted, and that was the only tribute of respect paid to the memory of the patriot hero.

Worse Than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terrible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas of this belt country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately the latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No matter if you have used this remedy before, it will pay you to get a bottle and read the directions, or send for the pamphlet just to learn how to use it economically.

New Hampshire Items.

The Universalist campmeeting at Laconia last week was largely attended, and the services very interesting and profitable.

The Cheshire and Eagle hotels in Keene, which closed May 21st on account of the enforcement of the prohibitory law, have concluded to reopen. The City hotel has passed to new management, and will be run as a boarding house.

Nathan Willey of Newmarket has been granted an increase of pension.

All Square.

The committee appointed by the governor and council of Maine to examine the accounts of the state treasurer and the commissioner of the treasury for the current year, reported Aug. 10th that Ex-Treasurer Burleigh's books and balances are in perfect order, and accurate throughout. The cash on hand July 4th, when his resignation took effect, was $177,800.27.

Superfine Flour.

There is no article of food more generally consumed than wheat flour in its various forms of bread and pastry, but chemists by examination find that by its use, mankind loses two-thirds of the elements that go to make up bone and muscle. These vital elements are the phosphates which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of health, and which nature has provided in the wheat grain, but man has removed from flour in the process of bolting. It was this fact that suggested the invention of Prof. Horsford of his preparation for a baking powder that would add these nutritious phosphates, and thereby supply the deficiency in the flour. In place of the alum, cream tartar, etc., used in common baking powders, he produced an acid phosphate, and thus makes a baking powder which not only raises the dough, but leaves in the bread the vital phosphates of which the flour has been deprived.

OBITUARY.

Henry Winkley of Philadelphia died last week. He was a native of Barrington in this state, and went to Philadelphia without a cent, and became a large crockery ware dealer. He gave $100,000 to Harvard college, $50,000 to Dartmouth, $50,000 to Phillips academy at Andover. He was eighty-four years of age. Barrington has been a good town for some smart men to emigrate from.

Richard S. Spofford, Esq., of Newburyport, died in that city Aug. 11th, in the 56th year of his age. He was an able lawyer, and filled many offices of public and political trust, always as a democrat. He was husband of Harriett Prescott Spofford, the authoress, and was himself possessed of considerable literary and poetic ability. His able articles in opposition to the fishery treaty now pending in the United States senate, have had great effect among the New England fishermen.

The Yellow Fever.

The New York board of health has declared a strict quarantine against infected points in Florida.

The reports of the fever in Jacksonville have caused a panic among the state troops at Magnolia Bluff, Fla., and three companies left camp on the night of the 9th inst. without orders.

Calumet & Hecla will resume dividends Sept. 5th, and pay on that day five per cent. The Barclays of the Back Bay can again draw their checks as of yore.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the sympathetic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." Note the difference in the figures of women who do and those who do not use modern labor-saving devices.

MORE BACKS are drawn out of shape by the old-fashioned see-saw, rubbing, twisting, wrecking way of washing clothes and cleaning house than by any other means. You ruin your health, form, clothes, paint, and don't get the best results.

Try the greatest invention of this Century in the way of soap—James Pyle's PEARLINE. It does away with the rubbing, hence there is no wear and tear on body or fabric. You don't have to bob up and down over a tub of soiled clothing and dirty water, inhaling poisonous odors and steam; hence you save your health. Its success is marvellous. Millions use it. Millions more will use it. Economical—Effective—Harmless. Every grocer sells Pyle's Pearline. Beware of peddled imitations, they're dangerous. JAMES PYLE, New York.

DEATH OF LIEUT. McRITCHIE.

Lieut. David G. McRitchie, U. S. N., on the retired list, died at Wiscasset, Me., Aug. 11th, at the age of fifty-eight years. He was attacked about three weeks ago with a swelling on the back of the neck, which proved to be a carbuncle of malignant character, and finally terminated his life, although no alarm was felt by his friends until about a week before his death, after which date he failed very rapidly, and ceased to breathe at 5:40 o'clock A. M. on the 11th inst.

Lieut. McRitchie was born in Scotland, and was a thorough seaman. His early experience was in the merchant service; he entered the volunteer navy from Maine on the 29th of October, 1861, as acting master, and served very actively all through the war. On the 12th of March, 1868, he was commissioned an ensign in the regular navy; was promoted to master Dec. 12th of the same year, and to lieutenant March 21st, 1870.

Lieut. McRitchie was well known at this port as the long-time commander of the Tallapoosa, then employed as a despatch boat and carrier of freight and passengers between the several navy yards. He was placed in command of the Tallapoosa in 1869, and continued until 1873, when he was transferred to the command of the Gettysburg, on special service, and about a year later was again ordered to command the Tallapoosa, which command he retained until 1881 or '82, when he was ordered to Callao to command the storeship Onward at that port. In June, 1884, he was invalided home, and shortly afterward was placed on the retired list of the navy on account of disabilities incurred in the line of duty. During all the years that he commanded the Tallapoosa she never met with any accident calling for any noteworthy expenditure for repairs, although she was almost constantly on the move from one naval station to another along the crowded waters of our coast; he handled the vessel as though she was a little steam yacht, and in making his landings at this navy yard would drop her alongside the wharf nine times in ten without running a line by boat. He was as popular with the "regular" naval officers as he was with the men under his command, and with everybody else with whom he came in contact, afloat or ashore. Since his retirement he has lived at his home in Wiscasset, Me., where his death occurred.

BASE BALL.

The following from Salem, Mass., was published in the Boston papers of Saturday morning, Aug. 11th: "A new programme is being arranged by the magnates of the New England league, which, if successfully carried out, will ensure the existence of the league for the remainder of the season. The Portsmouths disband Saturday of this week, and an effort will be made to secure players from the defunct Salem, Lynn and Portsmouth teams and place a team in Lawrence, the salary list of the new club to be guaranteed by Worcester, Lowell and Manchester, and not to exceed $1000 per month. Unless this is done the league will disband next week."

The Portsmouth club will finish the New England league season, arrangements satisfactory to the other clubs in the league having been completed at the meeting last Friday evening.

Among the sports at the St. Mary's Benevolent Society picnic at Pinkham's grove, Dover point, next Wednesday, will be a game of ball between the Electric club of this city and the Sawyer's of Dover. The Electrics are a strong club, having played a dozen games without losing one.

The Portsmouth club will play at Lowell to-day.

FIRE.

The church bell at Kittery Foreside rang out an alarm of fire at 4:15 o'clock Sunday morning, the cause being a blaze in the confectionery store of Jethro Swett at the villarge. An engine from the navy yard extinguished the fire, but not until the entire contents of the store were we did not learn, nor the amount of damage done.

GLAD HE'S GOT IT.

Mr. Alfred R. Goodwin, the popular boatman who has for so many years let out boats from the dock at the foot of Daniel street, and pulled passengers across the river at any hour of the night, on Saturday last received notice that he has been granted a pension of $4 a month, with arrears amouting to $825.27. Mr. Goodwin shipped at Charlestown, Mass., in 1862, on the U. S. S. Rhode Island, he then being about fifteen years old, and having already had nearly five years experience at sea; he served nearly four years, and was discharged for disability incurred in the line of duty.

Walter Trefethen, Joseph Adams, John Lowe and Leon Smart will camp out at Wallis' sands, Rye beach, on the 18th inst., for two weeks.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

The Army and Navy Register of Aug. 11th says: "The Portsmouth and Saratoga are to be extensively repaired at the Portsmouth, N. H., navy yard, and will be made over into very serviceable vessels." It also says "The navy department has decided to keep the old Constitution at Portsmouth, and not, as contemplated, remove her to Annapolis, Md."

It is announced that a theft of 40,000 lbs. of sugar from the Brooklyn navy yard has been discovered. That's nothing. This is a reform administration, and can't allow itself to be bothered by a little thing like that.

Lieut. Lucien Flynne is detached from the training ship Portsmouth, now at this navy yard, and placed on waiting orders. Gunner G. P. Cushman is detached from the Portsmouth, and ordered to the Norfolk navy yard. Gunner T. B. Watkins is ordered from the Wabash to the Portsmouth.

A small party from Exeter went to the Shoals on Saturday for a day's excursion.

The employes of the Portsmouth Brewing Co. had a picnic at Wood island, at the entrance to the harbor, on Sunday.

The funeral of Philip H. Sheridan, general of the United States army, took place in Washington on Saturday. No notice was taken of the event at the navy yard or in this city, so far as we have been informed—not even to the extent of hoisting the flag on the city building at half-mast, or half-masting the flag over the federal building.

Workmen are busily engaged at the north end, building the new coal shed for J. Albert Walker.

The Sherburne house, so-called, on Christian Shore, was sold on Saturday by $2500. The house is a large one, beautifully situated, in good repair, and has over six acres of land attached; we think Mr. Hett has got a good bargain.

Messrs. Michael J. Ryan and Samuel H. Alley left this city on Saturday for Wells, trout fishing, and returned on Sunday with fifty-three nice fish, some of which weighed over half a pound each.

A New York despatch of the 11th inst. announced that Hon. James G. Blaine and party would leave Boston at 12:30 P. M. on Tuesday, the 14th, in the special car of Gen. Manager Payson Tucker of the Maine Central railroad, over the Eastern railroad, making short stops at Lynn, Salem, Newburyport and this city.

What's the use of making a big time about a soldiers' monument, and omitting all notice at the City Hall of the obsequies of Gen. Sheridan? Where was the flag, Major?

The death claims paid by the Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York during the week ending Aug. 2d amounted to $135,825, and the matured endowments to $36,047.01; total, $171,872.01; average daily payments, $28,645.33.

The Dover Daily Times of last Friday gave notice of its discontinuance.

Mr. George Biddle, the Dover baker, who runs a cart in Wolfeborough, a cart and baker's store in Biddeford, and two carts and a store in Dover, has put on a cart in this city also. He ran a cart at York beach this season until the driver had the misfortune to break one of his legs, when he was obliged to withdraw it. Mr. Biddle bakes over 6000 loaves of bread every week, besides a very large amount of fancy biscuits, cakes and pastry. For six months in the year he manufactures cough drops and caramels, and he also does catering on a large scale.

Small tenements are very scarce and hard to be obtained in this city at present. A young working man with a small family, from Portland, wearied himself vainly throughout Thursday, looking for such a house.

The U. S. S. Despatch, Lieut. W. S. Cowles commanding, sailed from Boston on Friday, Aug 10th, presumably for Bar Harbor. She was in Portsmouth lower harbor Saturday morning, and remained over Sunday on account of the dense fog outside.

MUSIC HALL.

"Jim the Penman" will be presented at Music hall on Saturday evening, Sept. 8th. This is the last season this popular and powerful drama will be given, as it will have to be withdrawn to allow the presentation of other successes by Mr. Palmer's companies.

What a Time

People formerly had, trying to swallow the old-fashioned pill with its film of magnesia vainly disguising its bitterness; and what a contrast to Ayer's Pills, that have been well called "medicated sugar-plums"—the only fear being that patients may be tempted into taking too many at a dose. But the directions are plain and should be strictly followed.

J. T. Teller, M. D., of Chittenango, N. Y., expresses exactly what hundreds have written at greater length. He says: "Ayer's Cathartic Pills are highly appreciated. They are perfect in form and coating, and their effects are all that the most careful physician could desire. They have supplanted all the Pills formerly popular here, and I think it must be long before any other can be made that will at all compare with them. Those who buy your pills get full value for their money."

"Safe, pleasant, and certain in their action," is the concise testimony of Dr. George E. Walker, of Martinsville, Virginia.

"Ayer's Pills outsell all similar preparations. The public having once used them, will have no others."—Berry, Venable & Collier, Atlanta, Ga.

POLICE COURT.

On Friday night there was a lively and very noisy row in a place on Fleet street run by Edna Ward, which resulted in Mrs. Ward being locked up in the police station for the night, and brought before the police court Saturday morning on two charges—for drunkenness, and for keeping a disorderly house. On the first charge she was fined $3, costs being taxed at $6.90; on the second she was ordered to recognize in $200 for her appearance at the October term of the supreme court.

Three Summer Dangers.

Three summer dangers menace the household and traveller at every turn. They are climate, food and water. To guard against them requires judgment, abstinance, and SANFORD'S GINGER.

SANFORD'S GINGER, compounded of Imported Ginger, Choice Aromatics, and French Brandy, convenient, speedy and safe, instantly relieves cramps and pains, speedily checks all forms of summer complaints, prevents indigestion, destroys disease germs in water drunk, restores the circulation and digestion when suspended by a chill,—a frequent cause of cholera morbus,—breaks up colds and fevers, and wards off malarial, contagious, and epidemic influences.

As a pure fruit stimulant for the aged, mentally and physically overworked, for delicate females, especially mothers, and as a means of reforming those addicted to an excessive use of alcoholic stimulates, it is invaluable.

Never travel without SANFORD'S GINGER.

Beware of worthless "gingers" offensively urged by mercenary druggists and dealers on those who call for and desire only

The Instinct of Evil Living.

Thousands of the "unemployed" earn no wages because they do not want to work. They do odd jobs, they loaf, they tramp, they pilfer, they steal, and so on through the whole gamut of laziness and vice. Why is this? We have already said. Human nature is far from perfect yet. Many rogues are born; many others are easily turned into rogues by circumstances. It is likely enough that the instinct of evil living is transmitted; it is certain that the contamination of vicious surroundings has its natural effect. Necessity holds the born felon in a pitiless grip. Birth gives the infant the fatal bent; home life develops it. The unwieldy bulk of modern society is traversed by hard lines of moral as well as of social cleavage.

Crime runs into pockets like ore in the mine. The Ishmaelites dwell alone and propagate among themselves. There is nothing to attenuate the vicious strain. We have on the fringe of the decent population a class of creatures who, at best, are worthless, and too often are pure pests. It is recruited, but it is not regenerated, from the outside; on the other hand, it feeds the ranks of the thriftless, the reckless, the never-do-wells. What must be the result of such a state of things? With a rapidly increasing population, with a greater mass of poverty, a greater number of viciously disposed people crowding into "East ends" in all our great cities, what can we expect from a continuance of the present system of dealing with the criminal classes? Reason answers that we are to expect nothing but evil.—St. James' Gazette.

Dangers of Trapping the Grizzly.

I saw some remarks upon this subject the other day from an old trapper and hunter which evince a most thorough knowledge of the matter, and which coincide in every particular with my own personal experience.

He says: "I have hunted and trapped the grizzly bear scores of times, and if any one thinks there isn't peril as well as excitement in the sport, let him go out into the grizzly's country and try it. I know that the grizzly bear, next to the Indian, was the ugliest customer thirty years ago that the hunter had to deal with. In those days we used to think there was more danger in trapping the grizzly bear than there was in chasing him with the rifle.

"There have been times when trappers have come up with the bear at the very moment he has succeeded in tearing loose from the trap. I know one man, James Carver by name, who happened to reach his grizzly at such a time. The bear made one rush, and before the companion who was with Carver realized the situation the bear had torn Carver to pieces.

"I heard some one say once that when you have trapped a 1,000 pound grizzly you haven't caught a bear at all, but simply the devil incarnate, and I tell you that's pretty near the truth."—Gen. Marcy in Outing.

Working a Swiss Wine Press.

In the cafes and other public places there were placards advertising American wine presses, but I saw none of them in use. At a farm house near us we looked on at the use of one of the old fashioned Swiss presses. Under it lay a mighty cake of grapes, stems and skins, crushed into a common mass, and bulging further beyond the press with each turn of the screw, while the juice ran in a little rivulet into a tub below. When the press was lifted the grapes were seen only half crushed. Two peasants then mounted the cake and trimmed it into shape with long handled spades, piling the trimmings on top, and then bringing the press down again. They invited us with charming politeness to taste the juice, but their heavy boots bore evidence of too recent a visit to the cherished manure heap, and we thanked them with equal courtesy.

This grape cake, when it had yielded up its last drop, would be broken to pieces and scattered over the fields as a fertilizer. The juice would meanwhile have been placed to ferment in the tuns, twelve and thirteen feet deep, which lay in the adjoining cellar.—W. D. Howells in Harper's Magazine.

Oriental Peddlers in New York.

Turks and Arabs occasionally come through Castle Garden with designs on America as a dwelling place, and they generally stay and succeed right well. They pick up the language in no time, and are soon busy at small tobacco stands, or in Oriental bazars and Turkish bath houses, or selling Turkish confections and highly diluted attar of roses on the streets and in shops and offices. As peddlers they get on beautifully. Their handsome faces and Oriental manners draw nickels and quarters from those they approach with magical celerity. They always have a "God be with you," or a "Peace be yours," even for those who resist their blandishments. Their patience is something miraculous, and their persistence is without the irritating vulgarity which sometimes mars the otherwise perfect symmetry of the American born vender of small merchandise, who becomes in time a bulldozer of high degree. Only the male Turks and Arabs engage in the scuffle for bread. They usually discard their twistified names, and rechristen themselves by some easy and comfortable Christian name, such as "Charley," "George" or "William."—New York Press "Every Day Talk."

Paternal Reminiscences.

Col. Fred Grant and Robert Lincoln were conversing in low tones in the Fifth Avenue hotel corridor. Col. Grant pulled a cigar out of his pocket and stuck it in his mouth. From his trousers pocket he drew forth a solid gold match box, studded with diamonds. He touched the biggest stone with his thumb and the lid of the box flew open.

"Quite a match box," said Lincoln.

"Yes," said Col. Grant. "It was given to father by the sultan of Turkey. I would not part with for the world. It is very valuable. Father carried it for years. Do you carry anything that was precious to your father?"

"Yes," was the reply, and the speaker pulled out of his pocket an open face solid gold watch.

"It was given to father by mother," said the speaker. The inscription read: "To Abraham Lincoln, from his loving wife."—Foster Coates' Letter.

A Scrofulous Taint.

"What a very humorous boy your Arthur is, Mrs. Goodly. Wit and humor seem to sparkle in every glance of his eyes." "O dear, doctor, you don't think it is scrofulous humor, do you? I always thought there was a scrofulous taint in his blood: he took it from his grandmother. But if it gets into his eyes, O, dear! O, dear! what shall I do? —and he so loves to study, too. What remedy would you advise doctor!" Abstractedly, and from mere force of habit the doctor said, "Ingalls' Mandrake Compound is the best remedy I know of for humors of all kinds."

It is reported from Washington that Secretary Whitney has revived the order of Secretary Chandler which took the authority for making the details of officers away from the chief of the bureau of navigation, and placed it in the hands of a board consisting of all bureau chiefs of the department. This order Mr. Whitney revoked as soon as he possibly could after his appointment as secretary of the navy, and now he goes back to it. He could follow in Sec. Chandler's wake in a good (many other ways, with advantage to the navy and to his own reputation as a cabinet officer.

From Birth to the Grave

We carry with us certain physical traits, as we do certain mental characteristics. Inasmuch that psychologists have striven to designate by generic titles certain temperaments—as the billious, the nervous, the lymphatic. The individual with a sallow complexion is set down as billious, often rightly so. If the saffron in the hue of his skin is traceable to bile in the blood, its presence in the wrong place instead of the liver, will also be evinced by fur on the tongue, pain beneath the right ribs and through the right shoulder-blade, sick headache, constipation, flatulence and indigestion. For the relief of this very common, but not essentially perilous complaint, there is no more genial and thorough remedy than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is also a beneficent tonic and strength promoter, and a widely esteemed remedy for and preventive of fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles.

To avoid any possibility of complications arising from their marriage in New York, the duke of Marlborough and his wife went through another marriage ceremony at the London registrar's office.

An Important Element

Of the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is the fact that every purchaser receives a fair equivalent for his money. The familiar headline "100 Doses One Dollar," stolen by imitators, is original with and true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla. This can easily be proven by any one who desires to test the matter. For real economy, buy only Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists.

Mrs. Josie Richardson of Hoboken, N. J., after tramping for five years through many states in search of her runaway husband, on the 10th inst. arrived with her three children at Birmingham, Conn., and found him there, married to a young woman named Nellie Healy. He was held in $2000 for trial.

Seymour Thatcher, M. D., of Hermon, N. Y., says Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry cures a cough by loosening and clearing the lungs and allaying irritation, thus removing the cause instead of drying up the cough and leaving the cause behind.

HAWKS AND HYDROPHOBIA.

The Theory Advanced by a Practical Observer—Is He Correct?

I captured and raised a nest of young hawks. One female survived and became tame, following me devotedly around my garden. She learned to eat "cut worms" and was of very great service in consequence. She also kept birds from my strawberries, and by catching mice and young cats protected my chickens. She would not permit a dog to come on my grounds. The way in which she treated them and the effect her treatment produced may throw some light on the blindness and madness of foxes and wolves, and possibly be a clew to a cause of madness in dogs.

Her method with dogs was peculiar and must have been hereditary, as she had had no training. When she observed a dog near her she would thrust out her head, draw up one foot out of sight and drop her wings. If the dog advanced to attack her she would spring into the air by a quick movement of her wings, and catch the dog by the end of the nose, using the foot that had been hidden under her breast feathers. On this she supported her weight, steadying her body with her wings and threatening either eye that should open. I witnessed her encounters with two small lapdogs, a large fighting black and tan, bull terrier and a very large buff English mastiff. Each dog gave up on his third experience with her talons. The small dogs disappeared from town. No one knew where they went to. The terrier ran to his master's blacksmith shop, where he retired behind the forge.

Soon his master, Mr. James P. Hill, of Waterville, Me., came and asked me to go and see the dog. He had witnessed the fight with me only a few minutes before. On reaching the shop I found his dog cowering behind the forge in a pool of water, and as wet as though a bucket of water had been thrown upon him. I said to his master, "I would not throw water on him, he is frightened enough now." He replied: "I have not thrown any on him; that is sweat, the first I ever saw from a dog, and that is what I wanted you to come for." I saw the dog a few days after, with a thick viscid saliva hanging to his mouth, leaning against some infant school children, looking into their faces, receiving their caresses and acting very restlessly. Knowing his savage nature—the man's own children could not caress him up to the fight with the hawk—I went and called him into my garden and quietly ended his troubles with my pistol.

The mastiff was a noble dog of rare qualities, very intelligent, docile and obedient, would run errands better than a boy, and never played truant. He was owned by a gentleman in Winslow, Me., who said $100 would be no temptation for him to part with the dog.

I was called upon by this gentleman for professional services. His dog came with him. Knowing the hawk's love for a fight, I asked the man to bring the dog in. He wanted to know why. I told him. "I want to see the bird that can whip my dog," said he, and, seeing, nothing would do but "see the feathers fly." He did not see a feather disturbed, but his noble dog, after the third bout, ran for home, and the man could not stop him. The next week he came again. He had shot the dog "on the verge of madness." "A changed dog," "all afraid of him," "no longer mind."

"When I got home," said he, "I found the dog had come straight home and crawled in behind a pile of wood, which I had to take down to get him out. The dog, and the ground about him, were as wet as though a bucket of water had been thrown there; his eyes were bloodshot, and he growled and showed his teeth, a thing he was never known to do before. I had to kill him, for we were all afraid of him." I had told him what the result would be, still I could not help feeling sorry for him, and saying so. "Well, it was no fault of yours. If I had not seen the fight I could not have thought it possible. I would not have taken $100 that day for the dog. It was a pretty fight and worth the cost."—G. F. Waters, M. D., in The Swiss Cross.

Summer Camp for Invalids.

But perhaps the most curious, and certainly the most pathetic, of our summer colonies out of doors is that which is recruited from the hospitals. Whenever a hospital has a garden attached to it you will find tents pitched on the grass. In some cases they will be large army tents, and through their open flaps you may see rigid figures stretched on mattresses on the floor, while neat and noiseless nurses pass to and fro among them. In other instances they will be roofs of canvas, under whose shelter feeble, white faced men and women swing in cots or hammocks. The New York hospital has one of its spacious roofs covered with canvas awnings, beneath which patients who are beginning to mend are quartered, in order to have nature assist in the cure. It is a very recent institution, this summer encampment of the sick, but it is, I am told, already established as a valuable part of the process of cure. The trouble is that few of the hospitals have spare ground enough to carry out the plan properly. Some, too, which have the space, are so hedged in by other buildings that the sanitary value of their open air is seriously impaired.—Alfred Trumble in Pittsburg Bulletin.

The "Canals" of Mars.

At a recent meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences there was presented a series of drawings of the planet Mars made by M. Perrotin, director of the observatory at Nice. In the discussion which followed, M. Fizeau offered an explanation of the singular canals observed on the surface of Mars, which resemble slightly canals used for irrigation. The explanation which he gives is, that on the surface of Mars there must be large glaciers similar to those which exist on the earth, but of an extent far greater, and that the movements and crevasses are much more pronounced. This hypothesis, as M. Fizeau claims, accords perfectly with our present knowledge of the planet. We know, first, that the seasons are twice as long as on the earth; second, that the force of gravity is feeble; third, that the temperature is probably much lower than that of the earth; and, fourth, that the atmosphere is less developed than that of the earth, less extended, and consequently less able to absorb and preserve the solar heat.—Science.

New England's Sabbath Day Houses.

Every one went to church in the colonial days of New England. Families living at a distance from the meeting house came prepared to spend the intermission between the morning and afternoon services in the "Sabbath day houses." These houses, according to a description published in Sanford's "History of Connecticut," were small log structures, twenty-five feet long, ten broad, and one story high. A chimney in the middle divided the whole space into two rooms, for the use of the two families who united in building the house. The furniture consisted of a few chairs, a table, plates, dishes, and some utensils for warming cooked food. On a shelf were a Bible and two or three religious books.

In winter, on Sunday morning, before starting for church, the mother of the family put up food for dinner, not forgetting a jug of cider. The family rode in a large two horse sleigh, stopped at the Sabbath house, kindled a fire and then went into the cold meeting house, where the minister preached in an overcoat, with a muffler about his neck and mittens on his hands. The women carried heated stones in their muffs, and the men drew bags over their feet. No chronicler informs us how the boys and girls managed to keep warm during the long service.

At the conclusion of the morning service the family hurried back to the warm room of the Sabbath house, where they took their dinner and drank their cider from a pewter mug. Thanks were then returned and the review of the sermon began. If the sermon failed to furnish sufficient matter to occupy the hour, a chapter in the Bible was read, or a few passages from a religious book. Singing and prayer sent them to the afternoon service in a devotional frame of mind, at the conclusion of which they returned to the Sabbath day house, extinguished the fire, locked the door and started for home.—Youth's Companion.

Josephine's Ultra Luxurious Habits.

The Empress Josephine, the great Napoleon's wife, was a woman of the most ultra luxurious habits. Four to six times a day did she change her dress, and she never twice assumed any plain gown. Her weekly allowance of stockings was four dozen of silk in summer, and in winter two dozen of French silk hose and three dozen of the finest English cotton stockings. As for gloves and shoes, Mme. Bonaparte used up three dozen pairs a week, and she never wore any stockings that had been washed, nor donned more than once the same pair of gloves or shoes. The lace frills of her chemises cost $10 apiece. Every three months she exchanged her diamonds and other jewels, or had them newly set, according to the mutations of fashion.

Once a month, too, all the domestics in Josephine's household received fresh liveries, and every thirty days her wardrobe was divided among her maids of honor. Of these toilets the court lady had four, with an equal number of sets of jewelry—one for the Tuileries, one for St. Cloud, one for Malmaison and one for traveling. By touching certain springs she could command for her bath what perfumes her caprice required to mix with the water, the reservoirs always containing 12,000 francs' worth of the finest odors. By touching other springs a whole gallery of pictures and prints of a gay and vivacious character made its appearance, and when she wished to leave her bath she had but to touch a bell, when, by a mechanical contrivance, she was lifted into an elegant moderately warmed and perfumed bed, where she was nicely dried. Then, by another mechanical contrivance, she was lifted on to a splendid elastic sofa, which glided into the adjoining boudoir.—Once a Week.

Chinese Dog Skin Industry.

The rearing of dogs for their skins is pursued in China just as sheep farming is in Australia. There are thousands of small dog and goat farms scattered over the northern districts of Manchuria and Mongolia. Nature has provided a magnificent protection to withstand the cold of these northern latitudes, where the thermometer (Fahrenheit) goes down to 25 degs. below zero—that is, 57 degs. of frost—and it is doubtful if the dog skins in any other part of the world are to be compared with those that come from Manchuria or Mongolia, either in size, length of hair or quality. The fur is at its best during the winter, and the dog is killed before the thaw sets in, which is effected, not by the knife, which might injure the fur, but by strangulation.

It is difficult to understand how the farmers can rear the animals for the price they obtain for the hides. To provide a well made dog skin rug at least eight animals must be slaughtered, which at three taels per rug of eighty inches by sixty-three inches would allow not quite fifty-five cents per dog, including the sewing, choosing, etc., for the skins must fairly match in color. The flesh, however, is no doubt used for human food; the market value thereof enters largely into the farm's profit and loss account. When a girl is married she receives perhaps six dogs as her dowry.—London Standard.

Called Her a "School Lady."

"Don't call me a school girl. I just hate it," said a little miss just fresh from a Toronto boarding school the other day. I thought of the discussion over the term "shop girl," and of the preference some of the employes in our dry goods stores had expressed for the term "sales ladies." "Very well, my dear," said I, "I suppose you and the other little school ladies are real glad to have the summer holidays come." The little minx looked puzzled, teased and finally disgusted, and for twenty-four hours I called her a "school lady," till she begged for mercy and for a return to the good old term, "school girl." I wonder if there are any little school ladies in Buffalo.—Buffalo News.

Indians as Marksmen.

Generally speaking, the Indian is not as accurate a marksman as his white brother. He does not seem to understand how to use his gun sights to advantage. Still, he is far more successful in hunting, as, being thoroughly conversant with the habits and customs of different animals, he displays great ingenuity and skill in planning his attack and invariably brings down his game.—Pipe of Peace.

Inherited Diseases.

In the realm of disease the facts of inheritance are most numerous and are daily accumulating. Here, alas, they become terrible, fateful and overwhelming. No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease. It meets the physician on his daily rounds, paralyzing his art and filling him with dismay. The legend of the ancient Greeks pictures the Furies as pursuing families from generation to generation, rendering them desolate. The Furies still ply their work of terror and death, but they are not now clothed in the garb of superstition, but appear in the more intelligible but no less awful form of hereditary disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has shed a new light on the ominous words of the Scriptures, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Instances of hereditary disease abound. Fifty per cent. of cases of consumption, that fearful destroyer of families, of cancer and scrofula, run in families through inheritance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of hereditary disease." Probably more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure and functions of the body, are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far-reaching practical deductions from such facts—affecting so powerfully the happiness of individuals and families and the collective welfare of the nation—are obvious to reflecting minds, and the best means for preventing or curing these diseases is a subject of intense interest to all. Fortunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the remedy is the world-famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound—nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the afflicted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treatise on "Blood and Skin Diseases" will be mailed free by addressing

Defenders of American Industry.

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the president and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgement. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.—Republican National Platform, 1888.

"American wages for American workmen." Republican motto.

The Rebel Battle Flags.

The matter of President Cleveland's attempt to return the rebel battle flags having again been discussed in Congress, Gen. H. V. Boynton writes a long letter to the Cincinnati Commercial, showing that of the twenty-two confederate flags which Congessman McKinney said had been returned by Secretary of War Sexton "to the survivors of the organizations from which they had been captured," not one was returned to a confederate or the representatives of a confederate. He publishes an official list "of confederate flags given by the war department to certain parties on application," to prove his case. Of these, nine, it is stated in this list, are "supposed to have been loaned and never returned." Three were loaned to the 61st N. Y. V.; two to W. H. Ryder; four to Colonel E. Olcott, 121st N. Y. V.; one to Major General H. E. Davies; two were sent to the state of Iowa, and one was loaned to General W. T. Clark for use with a panorama.

What Are These Impurities?

The report of the Ohio State Dairy and Food Commission on baking powders shows a large amount of residuum or impurity to exist in many of these articles. The figures given by the commission are as follows:

NAME.	IMPURITIES OR RESIDUUM.
Cleveland's	10.18 per. ct.
Zipp's Crystal	11.99 "
Sterling	12.73 "
Dr. Price's	12.81 "
Forest City	20.14 "
Silver Star	51.3 "
De Land's	52.89 "
Horsford's	5.79 "

The question naturally arises in the minds of thoughtful consumers, of what does this impurity or residuum consist? In the case of the first named powder there has recently been given the result of an analysis made by Prof. C. F. Chandler, of Columbia college, late member of the New York state board of health, which partially supplies the missing information, and as the manufacturers of this particular powder are continuously calling for the publication of all the ingredients used in baking powders, there can be no objection to its statement here. Among the impurities, Prof. Chandler found Cleveland's powder to contain a large amount of rochelle salts, 5.49 per cent. of lime, with alumina, starch and water, in quantities not stated. Alum is a substance declared by the highest authorities to be hurtful. If the balance of this residuum in all the powders named is made up largely of alum, as it is known to be in some, the public would like to know it. Another official test that shall go quite to the bottom of the matter seems to be demanded.

To the Yellowstone Park and California.

Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb have arranged a grand trip to the Yellowstone National Park and across the continent to the Pacific Northwest and California in addition to their regular summer excursions to the great American Wonderland. The park will be visited at a time when travelling is delightful, and the same is true regarding the Pacific coast. Some idea of the wide scope of the tour may be gained when it is said that it extends along the Pacific coast over sixteen hundred miles from Victoria, the capital of British Columbia, to the Mexico line. The return tickets from any California point are good until July, 1889, and the excursionists will have the same advantages in the way of side trips, hotel coupons, etc., possessed by the members of the winter parties who go later. In addition to the September tour there will be two trips direct to Southern California, with September 10th and October 8th, as the dates of leaving Boston; an excursion to the Pacific Northwest and California over the Northern Pacific line October 8th; two trips to Colorado, September 10th and October 8th; and eighteen September tours to eastern and northern resorts. Circulars of all these may be obtained of W. Raymond, 296 Washington street, opposite School street, Boston, Mass.

At Concord, Aug. 13th, in the Concord railroad yard, a freight coupler twenty years old, named Charles N. Sprague, was killed by falling from a shifting engine and being run over by several cars. He was shockingly ground up.

William Harrigan of Danvers, Mass., has received $1800 damages from the Boston & Maine railroad on account of a child being killed by a train over a year ago.

A freight train was wrecked near Port Jervis, N. Y., Aug. 13th, by a land slide, and was run into by an express train. Two men were killed, eight fatally wounded, and twenty badly hurt. Horses belonging to Mrs. Langtry and Fred Gebhardt, valued at $100,000, were killed.

The cutters at the Portsmouth Shoe factory have a clambake at Rye beach today, if fair weather.

Plenty of performances on Wednesday, Aug. 15th. The annual illumination and general jollification at York beach; the celebration at Hampton of the 250th anniversary of the settlement of the town; the picnic at Dover point of the St. Mary's Benevolent Society of this city; picnic at York beach of the Methodist Sunday school of South Eliot; and half a dozen minor affairs in various near localities.

Frank E. Donnell of Dover, and wife, will remove from that city to Kittery Foreside this week, and take up their residence in the Swain house. Hett Bros., of this city, will remove the furniture from Dover to Kittery with their teams, Mr. Donnell regarding it as much more economical to effect his removal in this manner than to have his nice goods stove up in some cheaper method of transit. Mr. Donnell has an engagement to work in this city for a year.

A correspondent who has frequent occasion to pass from the west side of Middle st. out to the head of Bridge street enquires "Why the street commissioner does not replace the crosswalk at this place which was taken up when the street was regraded?" We have made enquiries in regard to this, and are able at last to obtain information which may be regarded as authentic. The job is not to be done at present. Next year Major Urch is to be made mayor and street commissioner. The democratic managers think that by this means a more vigorous case of our streets may be secured. The Major for the present is to be content with the nomination for the office of selectman from district No. 24, a position to which many of the active members of his party assert he is entitled. After wearing his senatorial honors, the Major will accept the nomination for the mayoralty, on condition that he be made also commissioner of streets. This the party will agree to. The Major is about all the rest to the city government, and it will be singular if in the city councils which begin official existence a year hence the indefatigable parliamentarian is not as usual at the head of the class.

CIT.

Faith meetings, under the direction of Rev. Dr. Simpson of New York, commenced at Old Orchard on Saturday, Aug. 11th. The Christian Workers' convention began a three days session at Ocean park the previous day.

Miss Ada Phillips of Boston died on the 24th of July at the residence of Albert Junkins, Esq., of Scotland district, York. She was an invalid for some time previous to his death.

The president did not like some of the local items of the river and harbor bill, and did not dare to sign it. At the same time, he was told in unmistakable terms that if he vetoed the message he might expect an ignominious defeat. For once the party was greater than the president. When he learned that there was a part of the bill which Mr. Frank Jones was quite anxious about, the reformer subsided and permitted it to become a law.

The president is careful to state that he frankly declares his indifference to the charge of favoring free trade. Worse Than Dynamite.

Hardly a month passes but we read of terrible explosions, and loss of life from natural gas.

One writer has raked up Chinese history, wherein it appears that away back in the time when the famous Chinese wall was building, before the use of gas wells was discovered, a terrible explosion took place.

The big wells in some way got the start of the little ones, so that enormous volumes of air were sucked down into those subterranean magazines. When the air reached certain proportions, the whole thing went off like a leaky gasoline stove. The result was horrible in the destruction of lives. The same writer predicts similar conditions underlying the great natural gas of this belt country, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, whereby that whole vast region might be ripped up to the depth of 1500 feet, leaving a chasm for the waters of the great lakes to pour down into, blotting out every living human being in this now densely populated valley from the face of the earth. That writer might easily have shown further, that throughout our whole country, not only in densely populated regions and cities, but in country and village houses as well, natural gases far more dangerous than are found in the lake regions, are carrying off not only "pig-tail" Chinamen, but our own families and friends, during the hot waves of July and August.

Scores of people are dying daily from typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera-morbus, and infant summer complaints; all caused by poisonous gases and ferments, far worse than hydrogen gas or dynamite in their explosions. Fortunately the latter danger can all be averted, by the use of a simple old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally, as explained in a pamphlet sent free to any one, by I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass. No matter if you have used this remedy before, it will pay you to get a bottle and read the directions, or send for the pamphlet just to learn how to use it economically.

Superfine Flour.

There is no article of food more generally consumed than wheat flour in its various forms of bread and pastry, but chemists by examination find that by its use, mankind loses two-thirds of the elements that go to make up bone and muscle. These vital elements are the phosphates which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of health, and which nature has provided in the wheat grain, but man has removed from flour in the process of bolting. It was this fact that suggested the invention of Prof. Horsford of his preparation for a baking powder that would add these nutritious phosphates, and thereby supply the deficiency in the flour. In place of the alum, cream tartar, etc., used in common baking powders, he produced an acid phosphate, and thus makes a baking powder which not only raises the dough, but leaves in the bread the vital phosphates of which the flour has been deprived.

September Excursions.

Eighteen different excursions are announced by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb for the month of September. The parties will travel under special escort, visiting the most desirable resorts in New England, the Middle States and Canada, while one of the parties will visit the battlefield of Gettysburg, the Luray caverns, the Natural Bridge of Virginia, Richmond, Washington, etc. The experience of Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb gives them the ability to plan and execute the most satisfactory pleasure and sightseeing tours, and their patrons are largely old travellers who fully understand and appreciate the advantages gained. In addition to the "Eighteen Tours," the firm advertise several longer autumn excursions including two to southern California, the Pacific Northwest and California (one including also the Yellowstone National Park), and two to Colorado. Descriptive circulars of the various tours may be obtained of W. Raymond, 296 Washington street, opposite School street, Boston, Mass.

Advices from the flooded Swiss districts report several deaths; fourteen persons are missing in the Lauben district alone.

Juan Perez of Pueblo, Mexico, has been captured, and will probably be hanged. He confesses to eight murders and numerous robberies.

Senator Chandler has given $100 toward the erection of the Ninth Regiment headquarters at the Weirs.

John L. Sullivan was knocked out in Brighton, Mass., Saturday night. Rum did it.

J. H. Reed of Albany, N. Y., and Miss Annie Millican of New Orleans, guests at a Bar Harbor hotel, went out in a canoe Saturday evening, and are supposed to have been drowned.

To the Deaf: A person cured of deafness and noises in the head of twenty-three years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it free to any person who applies to Nicholson, 177 MacDougal street, New York.

An extensive domestic market for the surplus produce of the soil is of the first consequence. It is, of all things, that which most effectually conduces to a flourishing state of agriculture.—Alexander Hamilton.

If once the United States finds herself on the road to free trade she will hardly know where to stop. For the principle which President Cleveland, as head of the democratic party, lays down is really that no import duties are justifiable which are not levied solely for purposes of revenue.—The Scotsman.

Upon the success of our manufactures, a the handmaid of agriculture and commerce, depends in a great measure the independence of our country, and none can feel more sensibly than I do the necessity of encouraging them.—Andrew Jackson.

We shall be much mistaken if the effect of this state communication [President Cleveland's message] will not be to strengthen considerably the case of free traders in all parts of the world. It will be regarded as a step in the right direction by all who believe in the soundness of free-trade principles.—London Post.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the sympathetic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." Note the difference in the figures of women who do and those who do not use modern labor-saving devices.

MORE BACKS are drawn out of shape by the old-fashioned see-saw, rubbing, twisting, wrecking way of washing clothes and cleaning house than by any other means. You ruin your health, form, clothes, paint, and don't get the best results.

Try the greatest invention of this Century in the way of soap—James Pyle's PEARLINE. It does away with the rubbing, hence there is no wear and tear on body or fabric. You don't have to bob up and down over a tub of soiled clothing and dirty water, inhaling poisonous odors and steam; hence you save your health. Its success is marvellous. Millions use it. Millions more will use it. Economical—Effective—Harmless. Every grocer sells Pyle's Pearline. Beware of peddled imitations, they're dangerous. JAMES PYLE, New York.

THE WEATHER.

For New England to-day:—

Fair or clearing weather, stationary or lower temperature, winds hauling to westerly.

A DANGEROUS PATH.

A lady correspondent, who is passing the summer at Newcastle, among other items in her letter, writes her regrets that she is "losing considerable of her pleasure and opportunity for ocean views by the fact that the lighthouse board has allowed the bridge between the keeper's house and the light at Fort Point to decay and fall to pieces. It has been in this condition for many months, and even the lightkeeper now must find it difficult to reach his station. The bridge, though government property, has always been used by visitors in passing to the outer rocks, a former favorite place of resort, and one where no harm can be done to government possessions by pleasure seekers.—Times.

This is one of the innumerable ways in which the inefficiency of the narrow-guage Cleveland administration demonstrates itself. Everywhere, to fill up a big surplus in the treasury for the benefit of the free trade advocates, appropriations for needed repairs of public property have been pared down. The dockyards, public buildings, and government property afloat and ashore, have been allowed to decay, that an overflowing treasury might be an argument in favor of reducing duties on imports. How much the people appreciate this narrow policy will be seen in the result of the November election.

REPUBLICAN CLUB MEETING.

At the meeting of the Republican club, Monday evening, Col. Wm. H. Sise, Col. Wm. H. Hackett and President Wm. H. Moore of the club were appointed a committee to represent the club on the occasion of the passage through this city on Tuesday afternoon of Hon. James G. Blaine.

It was voted that from now until after the election of Harrison and Morton the club meet every Monday evening.

MARITIME NOTES.

The steamer Oceanic only went as far as Whale's-back on her eleven o'clock trip Monday forenoon, the sea being too heavy to make the passage to the Shoals a safe one. It has got to be pretty hubbly when Capt. Robinson omits a trip, for the Oceanic is a staunch and able boat, and he knows it, and well knows how to handle her; but he is a judiciously careful mariner as well, and will never run the lives of passengers under his charge into any real danger.

About thirty feet in length of the old wharf at the rear of the Eldredge Brewing Co.'s stores on Bow street fell into the river on Sunday evening. It was here in the olden time that the West Indiamen of Portsmouth used to discharge their cargoes. The wharf was repaired a few years ago, but the superincumbent weight of gravel, much increased by the recent heavy rains, caused it to fall.

There were five steamers lying near Appledore wharf on Monday—the Oceanic, Cocheco, Clara Batemen, Ann and Valora.

The big schooner yacht Sea Crest was anchored between Badger's island and Pumpkin island on Monday morning. The big steam yacht Sagamore—she is big enough for a collier—remained at her anchorage there during the day.

The schooner Agnes E. Downs, Levi Dowes master, took forty salt barrels of mackerel off Boon island on Sunday. The Grace Choate, Robinson, took 6,000 mackerel by count.

Despite the moist weather of Sunday many row boats were out on the Piscataqua, and a number of steam and sail boats were to be noticed afloat with pleasure parties.

Fishermen report "nothing of consequence doing now, the dogfish are so solid."

Mr. Chris. Killeabeck came in from Little ledge, nine miles south of the Shoals, on Saturday, with 600 lbs. of fish; what he did not sell fresh he split and dried on Commercial wharf.

Smelts have struck in around the wharves, and the pole fishermen are making goods takes daily.

The Gloucester fish report at the close of last week reports the outlook in regard to mackerel unchanged, and the prospect at present very poor,—none of any account landed this season, and none of any account likely to be, either. The receipts of cod have also been light, and it is expected that the season will close with the market bater of stock than for many years.

BASE BALL.

The Worcester club will play the Portsmouths on the South street grounds this afternoon.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Wm. T. Rand and wife, of Boston, are making a short visit to Mr. Rand's parents, Alexander L. Rand, Esq., and wife, of Islington street.

Prof. Clarence Getchell has resigned the chair of chemistry in Phillips Exeter academy.

The new city government will be inaugurated to-day.

Thirty-five shipwrights were taken on the navy yard Monday morning, presumably to go to work on the repairs of the training-ship Portsmouth.

The tower of the new Jones brewery is completed, and is surmounted by a flagstaff forty-five feet high above the top of the tower. A substantilial railing is to be put around the top of the tower, so that visitors who desire to be made seasick and uncomfortable without any real danger can be accommodated.

Moses Howard has resigned the office of collector of taxes for the town of Greenland, having removed to Lynn. His father, Jedeo Howard, has been appointed as his successor in the office.

The Army and Navy Register of the 11th inst. says: "Mrs. Annan, the wife of Assistant Engineer J. W. Annan, of the Richmond, now filling for duty on the Asiatic station, is paying a visit at her father's, Mrs. F. M. Bostwick, in Vallejo, Cal. Ensign Bostwick is at present on the Pacific China station, and will be home during the year 1889. Mrs. Annan's skill on the guitar, coupled with her charming voice, render her an acquisition to the society of Vallejo, where she has many friends, and it is the intention of her sister to retain her until some time late in the fall, if possible."

What a Time

People formerly had, trying to swallow the old-fashioned pill with its film of magnesia vainly disguising its bitterness; and what a contrast to Ayer's Pills, that have been well called "sugar-coated sugar-plums"—the only fear being that patients may be tempted into taking too many at a dose. But the directions are plain and should be strictly followed.

J. T. Teller, M. D., of Chittenango, N. Y., expresses exactly what hundreds have written at greater length. He says: "Ayer's Cathartic Pills are highly appreciated. They are perfect in form and coating, and their effects are all that the most careful physician could desire. They have supplanted all the Pills formerly popular here, and I think it must be long before any other can be made that will at all compare with them. Those who buy your pills get full value for their money."

"Safe, pleasant, and certain in their action," is the concise testimony of Dr. George E. Walker, of Martinsville, Virginia.

"Ayer's Pills outsell all similar preparations. The public having once used them, will have no others."—Berry, Venable & Collier, Atlanta, Ga.

FOOD IN NORTHERN INDIA.

Women Who Work the Mill—Cooking Without Stove or Range.

Wheat is the chief food in Northern India, although rice and coarser grains are also largely used. Very early in the morning "the sound of the grinding is heard" in the houses of the natives. Some woman, a servant, a widow, or the mother of the family is grinding wheat for the day's consumption. Sometimes two women work the mill, which is a rude but serviceable contrivance, within the means of most families. The coarsely ground flour is kneaded with water into a mass of stiff dough, covered with a piece of muslin and set away.

Meanwhile the men, having repeated the prayer to the sun at the exact moment of its rising, go to their daily avocations. The children, if they wish, receive a little food that was left over from the dinner of the previous evening, and go to school or to play in the court yard. The women make the rooms tidy, bathe and dress, and await the return of the men. About noon they come, bathe by the well in the court yard, and perform worship by placing a little food or a flower before the family idol, burning a little incense, and muttering a few prayers, after which they repair to the place set apart and consecrated to the sacred act of eating. They sit on the floor with their knees near the chest, wearing only a single garment wrapped about them, which they wash themselves so that it shall not be contaminated by the touch of a man of low caste. Their other garments must not be worn when they eat, because they have been defiled in this way.
